Contributors

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.

DAVID BACHMAN is a professor in and associate director of the Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies at the University of Washington (Seattle, WA). He is currently researching the history of the defence industries in China.

VALENTINA BORETTI is a PhD candidate in history at SOAS, University of London. She is currently completing her dissertation on the toy culture in republican China, including the way toys were meant to shape gendered identities. Her research interests also comprise gender history in imperial China.

JEAN-PIERRE CABESTAN is senior researcher at the Centre national de la recherche scientifique (CNRS, French National Centre for Scientific Research). He is attached to the Institute of Comparative Law of the University of Paris-1.

CONG CAO is a senior research associate with the Neil D. Levin Graduate Institute of International Relations and Commerce, the State University of New York.

YANGDON DHONDUP is a research fellow at the Section des langues et civilisations orientales, University of Lausanne, Switzerland.

HARRIET EVANS is professor of Chinese cultural studies at Westminster University, London. Her current research includes a project on mothers, daughters and gendered subjectivities in China; sexuality and reproductive health in China; and political posters and visual culture in the PRC.

ANDREW HALPER received a BA in Chinese and an LLB in law from the University of British Columbia, and a DEA in comparative law from the University of Paris-1. He is a partner and the head of China Practice at Eversheds, a London-based law firm, and divides his time between the firm's London and Shanghai offices. From 1991 to 1994 he was a diplomat at the Canadian Embassy in Beijing, and from 1994 to 1998 he practiced law in that city. In addition to full-time law practice, he has lectured on Chinese law at the universities of London (SOAS) and Cambridge.

HARRY HARDING is presently Director of Research and Analysis at Eurasia Group, a political risk advisory and consulting firm headquartered in New York. He is on leave from the George Washington University, where he is University Professor of International Affairs. His most recent book, co-edited with Francine Frankel, is The India–China Relationship: Rivalry and Engagement (Oxford University Press, 2004).

© The China Quarterly, 2006 doi: 10.1017/S0305741006000658

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000658 Published online by Cambridge University Press

JAMES L. HEVIA is director of the International Studies Program in the College at the University of Chicago. His most recent book is English Lessons: The Pedagogy of Imperialism in 19th-Century China (Duke University Press, 2003) and his current research is on British Military Intelligence and the construction of geo-strategic Asia.

VIRGIL K. Y. HO is associate professor of Modern Chinese History at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. He recently published Understanding Canton: Rethinking Popular Cultures in the Republican Period (Oxford University Press, 2005)

CHRISTOPHER HUGHES is reader in international relations at the London School of Economics and Political Science, specializing on Chinese politics and foreign policy.

CHANG-TAI HUNG is chair professor of humanities in the division of humanities at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology.

MATTHEW DAVID JOHNSON is a PhD candidate in history (modern China) at the University of California, San Diego, and is presently writing his dissertation on "Thought Industry: State, Cinema and Society in the People's Republic of China, 1949–1969."

WILLIAM C. KIRBY is the Geisinger Professor of History, Director of the Fairbank Center for East Asian Research, and former Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences at Harvard University. His work studies China's modern development in its international context. His recent, edited books include: Realms of Freedom in Modern China (Stanford University Press, 2004); The Normalization of US–China Relations: An International History (with Gong Li and Robert Ross) (Harvard University Asia Center, 2006); and China and the World: Internationalization, Internalization, Externalization (with Mechthild Leutner, Dayong Niu and Wen-hsin Yeh) (Hebei People's Press, 2006).

THOMAS KAMPEN teaches Chinese Politics and Modern History at the University of Heidelberg in Germany. He recently published Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai yu Zhonggong lingdaoquan de bianqian (Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai and the Evolution of the Chinese Communist Leadership) (Hong Kong: Shidai chaoliu chuban youxian gongsi, 2005).

STEVEN LEVINE is senior research associate at The Maureen and Mike Mansfield Center of the University of Montana, USA.

SONNY LO is associate professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Waterloo, Canada.

RODERICK MACFARQUHAR is the Leroy B. Williams Professor of History and Political Science at Harvard University. Mao's Last Revolution, co-authored with Michael Schoenhals, was published by Harvard's Belknap Press earlier this year.

JAMES MULVENON is Director, Advanced Studies and Analysis, at DGI's Center for Intelligence Research and Analysis in Washington, DC.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000658 Published online by Cambridge University Press

JAMES F. PARADISE is a student in the PhD program in political science at University of California, Los Angeles. He is a contributor to UCLA's AsiaMedia website and was guest editor of the July–August 2004 issue of Chinese Law & Government devoted to the topic of "Television, Radio, and Film Law in China."

PAUL G. PICKOWICZ is Distinguished Professor of History and Chinese Studies at the University of California, San Diego. Most recently he is co-author of Revolution Resistance and Reform in Village China (Yale University Press, 2005), co-editor of The Chinese Cultural Revolution as History (Stanford University Press, 2006), and co-editor of From Underground to Independent: Alternative Film Culture in Contemporary China (Rowman and Littlefield, 2006). He is currently Distinguished Visiting Scholar at the Contemporary China Studies Programme, University of Oxford.

DAVID SHAMBAUGH is professor of political science and international affairs, and director of the China Policy Program at the George Washington University. He was previously the editor of The China Quarterly (1991–96). His most recent and forthcoming books are China's Communist Party: Atrophy and Adaptation (University of California Press and Woodrow Wilson Center Press, 2007); The China-Europe Engagement, co-edited with Eberhard Sandschneider and Zhou Hong (Routledge, 2007); and China Watching: Perspectives from Europe, Japan, and the United States, co-edited with Robert Ash and Seiichiro Takagi (Routledge, 2006).

MARGARET SLEEBOOM-FAULKNER is senior lecturer in anthropology at the University of Sussex. Her research fields include nation-state building and science and society in East Asia.

STEVE SMITH is professor of history at the University of Essex. His most recent book is Like Cattle and Horses: Labor and Nationalism in Shanghai, 1895–1927 (Duke University Press, 2002).

JULIA STRAUSS is senior lecturer in Chinese politics at the department of politics and international studies, SOAS. Her research interests include: the evolution of the 20th century Chinese state; the interaction between culture and institutions; comparative public administration, politics in Taiwan, and the implementation of environmental regulation in the PRC. She is the editor of The China Quarterly.

RONALD SULESKI is assistant director of the Fairbank Center for East Asian Research at Harvard University. A detailed review by Tao Jiyi of his book Civil Government in Warlord China: Tradition, Modernization and Manchuria (2002), appeared in Lishi yanjiu (Historical Research), No. 4, 2005.

EDWARD VICKERS is lecturer in comparative education at the Institute of Education, University of London. His publications include In

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000658 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Search of an Identity: The Politics of History as a School Subject in Hong Kong, 1960s–2005 and (with Alisa Jones) History Education and National Identity in East Asia (both published by Routledge). He has recently surveyed China's education system for a jointly-authored report commissioned by the UK's Department for International Development – Education and Development in a Global Era: Strategies for "Successful" Globalisation.

ANDREW WALDER is professor of sociology at Stanford University and the editor (with Joseph Esherick and Paul Pickowicz) of The Chinese Cultural Revolution as History (Stanford University Press, 2006)

WANG ZHENG is an associate professor of women's studies, and associate research scientist of the Institute for Research on Women and Gender at University of Michigan. Her publications concern feminism in China, both in terms of its historical development and its contemporary activism, and changing gender discourses in China's socioeconomic, political and cultural transformations of the past century. She is the author of Women in the Chinese Enlightenment: Oral and Textual Histories (University of California Press, 1999) Her recent research deals with gender in Maoist urban reorganization.

SUSANNE WEIGELIN-SCHWIEDRZIK is professor for Chinese studies at the department for East Asian studies of the University of Vienna. She has published on 20th-century Chinese history and historiography.

DALI L. YANG is professor and chairman of the department of political science at the University of Chicago. Among his books are Remaking the Chinese Leviathan: Market Transition and the Politics of Governance in China (Stanford University Press, 2004); Calamity and Reform in China: State, Rural Society and Institutional Change Since the Great Leap Famine (Stanford University Press, 1996); Beyond Beijing: Liberalization and the Regions in China (Routledge, 1997) and, as co-editor (with Barry Naughton) and contributor, Holding China Together: Diversity and National Integration in Post-Deng China (Cambridge University Press, 2004).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000658 Published online by Cambridge University Press