criticsm 350 Another Field of Vision: Crossing the boundaries between virtual and real at the Louvre-Lens Museum Jing Yang and Jonathan Hale examine an 'augmented reality' experience of the Louvre-Lens Museum as an alternative field of visual stimulation with potential to transform the embodied perception of architecture.

history 361 Hermann Muthesius in London: The formative years of an 'international' national style, 1896-1903 Mohamed Derbal argues that Hermann Muthesius's formative years in London shaped core principles of German modernism through his reinterpretation of the Arts and Crafts.

375 Architects' journeys to Italy and their contribution to architectural culture in postwar era Turkey Ceren Hamiloğlu and Ahsen Özsoy scrutinise Turkish architects' journeys to Italy in the postwar era, focusing on the role of travel in inducing architectural productions through a variety of representation systems.

digital 387 Physarum computation in architecture: A critique of Bio-digital Design Melih Kamaoğlu offers a critique of Physarum computing focusing on the role of digital and physical computation in fostering relationships between evolutionary processes and the built environment.

materials 399 The matter of architecture: Building materials in the anthropocene Cristián Simonetti and Eduardo Wiegand locate concrete in the Anthropocene to argue that design should be metabolically responsive to the geological history of building materials.

research 411 Disrupting design research in architecture: Speculating about a third phase of architectural design research George Themistokleous and Yasser Megahed propose a third phase of architectural design research, moving from disrupting traditional knowledge production to expanded possibilities.
