The Journal of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era 17 (2018), v–x doi:10.1017/S1537781417000500

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781417000500 Published online by Cambridge University Press

CONTRIBUTORS

Lloyd E. Ambrosius (lambrosius1@unl.edu) is the former Samuel Clark Waugh Distinguished Professor of International Relations and Professor Emeritus of History at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln. He is the author of three books on Woodrow Wilson, most recently Wilsonianism: Woodrow Wilson and His Legacy in American Foreign Relations (London: Palgrave Macmillan, 2002). Ambrosius served as president of the Society for Historians of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era from 2015–17.

Gregory Atkins (Gregory.atkins@wsu.edu) is a Doctoral Candidate working with Dr. Matthew Avery Sutton at Washington State University. His interests include the religious, urban, and political history of the U.S. West. His dissertation, Evangelical Mecca: Business, Boosters, and Christianity in Colorado Springs, 1871–2000, investigates how Colorado Springs carved out a national reputation over the last 150 years. Initially touted as a refined resort in the West, boosters of Colorado Springs later emphasized health, tourism, the defense industry, and evangelical Christianity to promote the city. Throughout these iterations, boosters and religious leaders worked closely. As these campaigns built upon and constrained each other, they also set important precedents for the American West, conservative politics, and American religion that helped make the city a hotbed for the cultural wars of the 1980s and 1990s.

Rachel Ida Buff (rbuff@uwm.edu) is Professor of History, Director of the Cultures and Communities Programs, and Coordinator of the Coordinator of the Ethnic Studies Program at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. She is the author of Against the Deportation Terror: Organizing for Immigrant Rights in the Twentieth Century (Temple University Press, 2017). And she is a proud member of UWM AAUP, working toward democratic public education.

Aviva Chomsky (achomsky@salemstate.edu) is Professor of History and Coordinator of Latin American Studies at Salem State University in Massachusetts. Her books include They Take Our Jobs! And 20 Other Myths about Immigration and Undocumented: How Immigration Became Illegal (Beacon Press, 2007).

Justin Tyler Clark (Justin.clark@ntu.edu.sg) is Assistant Professor of History at Nanyang Technological University in Singapore. His monograph, City of Second Sight: Nineteenth-Century Boston and the Making of American Visual Culture, is forthcoming from University of North Carolina Press in spring 2018.

© Society for Historians of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781417000500 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Grace Peña Delgado (gpdelgad@ucsc.edu) is Associate Professor of History and Director of Graduate Studies at the University of California, Santa Cruz. Her research interests include North American border-making processes, Chinese in the Americas, the policing of sexuality and morals, and transnationalism. She is the author of Making the Chinese American: Global Migration, Localism, and Exclusion in the U.S.-Mexico Borderlands (Stanford University Press, 2012), distinguished as a CHOICE Academic Title; and a forthcoming work on early immigration control at the Canada-U.S.-Mexico borders, Sex and State: Prostitution, White Slavery, and Deportation in the Policing of Bodies at North America's Borderlands. Delgado is also co-author of Latino Immigrants in the United States (Polity, 2011). Delgado participates on the Arts and Humanities Research Council's (UK) Project on Trafficking, Smuggling and Illicit Migration in Historical and Gendered Perspective at Cambridge University and also collaborates with Yale University's Gilder Lehrman Center for the Study of Slavery, Resistance and Abolition working group on Modern Day Slavery. Delgado received her PhD from UCLA in American History.

Hasia Diner (hrd1@nyu.edu) is the Paul S. and Sylvia Steinberg Professor of American Jewish History; Director, Goldstein-Goren Center for American Jewish History, New York University. Author of numerous books, most recently, Lower East Side Memories: A Jewish Place in America (Princeton University Press, 2000); of Hungering for America: Italian, Irish, & Jewish Foodways in the Age of Migration (Harvard University Press, 2002); The Jews of the United States, 1654 to 2000 (University of California Press, 2004); and We Remember with Reverence and Love: American Jews and the Myth of Silence after the Holocaust, 1945–1962 (New York University Press, 2009).

John-Charles Duffy (duffyjc@miamiOH.edu) is a Lecturer in the Department of Comparative Religion at Miami University (Ohio), where he teaches courses in American religious history. His historical research has focused on Mormonism's positioning in American culture, including a study of the mainstreaming of Mormon studies within American academia in the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries.

Meghan Freeman (Meghan.freeman@mville.edu) is an Associate Professor in the Department of English at Manhattanville College in Purchase, NY.

Sonia Hernández (soniah@exchange.tamu.edu) is Associate Professor of History and Director of Latina/o & Mexican American Studies at Texas A&M University. She is a member of Refusing to Forget (resfusingtoforget.org). Hernández is the author of the award-winning Working Women into the Borderlands (Texas A&M University Press, 2014); of Mujeres, trabajo y región fronteriza (México: INEHRM, ITCA, 2015); and of the award-winning article, "Revisiting Mexican(a) Labor History through Feminismo Transfronterista: From Tampico to Texas and Beyond, 1910–1940," in Frontiers: A Journal of Women Studies (2015).

Torrie Hester (torrie.hester@slu.edu) is Associate Professor in the Department of History at Saint Louis University. She is the author of Deportation: Origins of U.S. Policy (2017) and articles in the Journal of American History and The Journal of American Ethnic History. Her next book project examines legal protections for migrants in the century before World War II and the development of modern national human rights law.

Michael Hines (mh3824@tc.columbia.edu) earned his PhD from Loyola University Chicago and is currently a Postdoctoral Fellow at Teachers College Columbia University where he researches the history of American education and the intersections of race and class with that history.

Hidetaka Hirota (hhirota@ccny.cuny.edu) is a Substitute Assistant Professor of History at the City University of New York-City College. He is the author of Expelling the Poor: Atlantic Seaboard States and the Nineteenth-Century Origins of American Immigration Policy (Oxford University Press, 2017). His works have appeared in the Journal of American History, American Quarterly, and the Journal of American Ethnic History. He is currently developing two book projects. One of them examines the significance of foreign contract labor in American immigration history, and the other provides a synthetic history of American nativism from the American Revolution to the present.

Kristin Hoganson (hoganson@illinois.edu) is Professor of History at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her research focuses on the history of U.S. empire in the long nineteenth century. She is the author of Fighting for American Manhood: How Gender Politics Provoked the Spanish-American and Philippine-American Wars (Yale University Press, 1998), and Consumer's Imperium: The Global Production of American Domesticity, 1865–1920 (University of North Carolina Press, 2007). She is the current president of the Society for Historians of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era (SHGAPE).

Charles F. Irons (cirons@elon.edu) is Professor of History and Chair of the Department of History and Geography at Elon University. He is the author of The Origins of Proslavery Christianity: White and Black Evangelicals in Colonial and Antebellum Virginia (University of North Carolina Press, 2008). His current research is on the complicated process through which black churchgoers withdrew from white-controlled congregations following the Civil War.

Julian Lim (jlim42@asu.edu) is Assistant Professor, Arizona State University. He is the author of Porous Borders: Multiracial Migrations and the Law in the U.S.-Mexico Borderlands (University of North Carolina Press, 2017).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781417000500 Published online by Cambridge University Press

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781417000500 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Maddalena Marinari (mmarinar@gustavus.edu) is Assistant Professor, Gustavus Adolphus College; and board member of the Immigration and Ethnic History Society. She is author of "Divided and Conquered: Immigration Reform Advocates and the Passage of the 1952 Immigration and Nationality Act," Journal of American Ethnic History (2016); and "'Americans Must Show Justice in Immigration Policies Too': The Passage of the 1965 Immigration Act," Journal of Policy History (2014). She also has a forthcoming book on the mobilization against restrictive immigration laws from 1882 to 1965 and a forthcoming co-edited volume on the impact of immigration restriction on U.S. society from 1924 to 1965.

David Monod (dmonod@wlu.edu) is Professor of History at Wilfrid Laurier University in Waterloo, Canada. His most recent book is The Soul of Pleasure: Sentiment and Sensation in Nineteenth-Century American Mass Entertainment (Cornell University Press, 2016).

Michael Neiberg (Michael.s.neiberg@mail.mil) is Chair of War Studies and Professor of History at the U.S. Army War College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He is the author of The Path to War: How the First World War Created Modern America (Oxford University Press, 2016), and The Treaty of Versailles: A Concise History (Oxford University Press, 2017).

Scott Reynolds Nelson (srnelson@uga.edu) is UGA Athletics Association Professor of History at the University of Georgia. His books include Steel Drivin' Man: John Henry, the Untold Story of an American Legend (Oxford University Press, 2008), and A Nation of Deadbeats: An Uncommon History of America's Financial Disasters (Vintage, 2013).

Alison M. Parker (aparker@brockport.edu) is Professor of History at the College at Brockport, State University of New York. She is currently a Visiting Fellow at Emory University's James Weldon Johnson Institute for the Study of Race and Difference.

Jeanne Petit (petit@hope.edu) studies women, gender, immigration and religion in the early 20th century. She is presently researching the history of American Catholic women during World War I and the post-war era. She is the author of The Men and Women We Want: Gender, Race, and the Progressive Era Literacy Test Debate (University of Rochester Press, 2010).

Emily Pope-Obeda (popeobeda@fas.harvard.edu) is a Lecturer in the History and Literature Program at Harvard University. Her research and teaching interests focus on migration, race, ethnicity, labor, and working-class history in the nineteenth- and twentieth-century United States. She received her PhD in History from University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign in 2016. Before coming to Harvard, she was a visiting fellow at the James Weldon Johnson Institute for the Study of Race and Difference at Emory University. She is currently working on a book manuscript on the history of deportation practice during the 1920s.

Paul Emory Putz (paul_putz@baylor.edu) is a PhD Candidate in History at Baylor University. He is writing a dissertation on the institutionalization of white Protestantism within big-time sports in the United States. Broadly, his research focuses on the intersection of religion and popular culture in the twentieth-century United States.

Brent Ruswick (bruswick@wcupa.edu) is Assistant Professor of History and Coordinator of Social Studies Education at West Chester University of Pennsylvania.

Karen Senaga (Karen.senaga@usu.edu) earned her PhD in History from Mississippi State University in 2016 and is a Postdoctoral Teaching Fellow at Utah State University. Senaga is currently working on a manuscript on farmed catfish entitled Tasteless, Cheap, and Southern: A History of the Farm-Raised Catfish Industry.

Brian Shott (brian.shott@gmail.com) is an Independent Scholar living in Berkeley, CA. He received his PhD in U.S. history from the University of California at Santa Cruz in December 2015. His dissertation, "Mediating America: Black and Irish Press and the Struggle for Citizenship, 1870–1914," won an honorable mention in the 2016 Margaret A. Blanchard Prize competition, given annually by the American Journalism Historians Association for the best doctoral dissertation dealing with mass communications history. Shott has taught U.S. history to inmates and served as a writing tutor through the Prison University Project at San Quentin. Before pursuing an advanced degree, he worked for several newspapers and edited the newswire at New America Media in San Francisco. His journalistic writing can be found in the San Francisco Chronicle, the Los Angeles Times, and other publications.

Elliott W. Simon (Elliott.simon@elwyn.org) is a Licensed Psychologist who has worked for over thirty years as a clinician, researcher, and administrator in the field of intellectual and developmental disabilities. Dr. Simon has published on a wide variety of topics related to intellectual disability, including diagnostic issues in intellectual disability, facial emotion recognition, memory, quality of life, and the practical applications of genetic diagnoses. He has been a speaker at both regional and national conferences that include the American Association for Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities, American Psychological Association, National Association of State Directors of Developmental Disability Services, TASH, and the National Association for the Dually Diagnosed.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781417000500 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Dr. Simon is the executive director of Research and Quality Improvement at Elwyn and curates their archives and museum.

Rose Stremlau (rostremlau@davidson.edu) is an Assistant Professor of History at Davidson College. She is the author of Sustaining the Cherokee Family: Kinship and the Allotment of an Indigenous Nation (University of North Carolina Press, 2011) and is working on a new project on Southeastern Indians in the West and the Pacific during the nineteenth century.

Elliott Young (eyoung@lclark.edu) is Professor of History and Director of Ethnic Studies at Lewis and Clark College. He is the co-editor of Continental Crossroads: Remapping U.S.-Mexico Borderlands History (Duke University Press, 2004). Dr. Young is the author of Catarino Garza's Revolution on the Texas-Mexico Border (Duke University Press, 2004); and Alien Nation: Chinese Migration in the Americas, the Coolie Era to WWII (University of North Carolina Press, 2014).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781417000500 Published online by Cambridge University Press