Acknowledgments

A great number of people made this book possible. I owe them all a tremendous amount of gratitude. The book began at Yale University as part of my PhD dissertation under the brilliant guidance of my committee – Nicholas Sambanis, Kate Baldwin, Alex Debs, and Sarah Bush. I am especially grateful to Nicholas, who chaired my committee, for the mentorship that made me into the researcher I am today. Kate pushed me to expand my ideas and sharpened the design of the research. Alex offered patient guidance from the first idea to the final submission, always offering an "onwards!" when I needed it most. Sarah inspired and shaped the transition from dissertation to book.

Yale's Department of Political Science was an ideal place to develop the initial ideas for this book. I am particularly grateful to the peers who directly influenced this project – Vivek Ashok, Natália Bueno, Suparna Chaudhry, Charles Decker, Josh Goodman, Jiyoung Ko, Daniel Masterson, Niloufer Siddiqui, Guadalupe Tuñón, and Louis Wasser. I also benefited from thoughtful comments offered by Nick Anderson, Rob Blair, Stathis Kalyvas, Jason Lyall, Constantine Mande, Nikolay Marinov, Lucy Martin, Gautam Nair, Molly Offer-Westort, Kyle Peyton, Pia Raffler, Thania Sanchez, Peter Tinti, and Steven Wilkinson.

I wrote the first drafts of the book as a faculty member at Washington University in St. Louis's Department of Political Science. The junior faculty group provided support and critical feedback for these early drafts: Taylor Carlson, Christopher Lucas, Lucia Motolinia, Mike Olson, Keith Schnakenberg, Carly Wayne, and Anna Wilke. I owe a tremendous debt to David Carter, who not only mentored me during my time at Washington University but also chaired a two-day book workshop that shaped the final version of the book. I am thankful to Lise Howard, Susan Hyde, Andy Kydd, David Lake, Aila Matanock, and Andrea Ruggeri for participating in this workshop and offering incisive and helpful comments. Margit Tavits provided feedback on the project and continual support as Chair during this time.

The final version of the book was completed at the University of California, Santa Barbara. I am thankful to the colleagues who helped me get across the finish line, especially Kate Bruhn, Bridget Coggins, Paasha Madhavi, Matto Mildenberger, Julia Morse, Neil Narang, and Leah Stokes. I am also grateful to Cambridge University Press and, in particular, John Haslam, Carrie Parkinson, and two anonymous reviewers. Kelley Friel provided invaluable editing at several stages of the manuscript. Parts of this book were previously published in my 2022 Journal of Politics article "Peacekeeping and the Enforcement of Intergroup Cooperation: Evidence from Mali," reprinted here with permission from the University of Chicago Press. I am grateful for funding from the Folke Bernadotte Academy, the Woodrow Wilson Center, the Institute for Social and Policy Studies, the Leitner Program for Comparative and International Political Economy, the MacMillan Center for International and Area Studies, the Clara Levillain Prize, the Weidenbaum Center at Washington University in St. Louis, and the European Union Studies program at Yale.

My research in Mali would have been impossible without the staff of Innovations for Poverty Action: Romuald Anago, Charles "Samba" Coulibaly, Diakaridia Dao, Alassane Koulibaly, Kadidia Maiga, Estelle Plat, Arthur Sagot-Duvauroux, Nicolo Tomaselli, and Seydou Traore, as well as the dozens of mobilizers, enumerators, and other staff who worked closely with me. I hope I have done your efforts justice with this book. Thank you also to the extraordinary UN officials who met with me in New York, Mali, and elsewhere for being so generous with your time. For their outstanding research on the cross-national data, I thank the researchers in my Data-driven Analysis of Peace Project lab, particularly Patrick Hunnicutt, who is a dream collaborator. Amelia Frederking, Ipek Sener, and Tony Yang provided research assistance at critical stages of the project.

I have been incredibly fortunate to present and workshop this book in front of many audiences. I received feedback from participants at annual meetings of the American Political Science Association (APSA), International Studies Association, and the Midwest Political Science Association. In particular, I benefited from an APSA "author-meets-critics" roundtable with Kyle Beardsley, Susan Hyde, David Lake, Aila Matanock, and Eric Mvukiyehe that I organized with Rob Blair. I also presented the project at the Orfalea Center for Global Security at the University of California, Santa Barbara; the Yale African Politics Working Group; the Political Violence FieldLab at Yale; the Yale Program on Order, Conflict, and Violence; the Yale Experiments Workshop; the Leitner Program on International and Comparative Political Economy Workshop; the Harvard Experiments Working Group; the Boston-Area

Working Group in African Political Economy; the Ohio State University Comparative Politics Workshop; the Yale MacMillan International Relations Seminar Series; the University of Michigan; and various meetings of Folke Bernadotte Academy working groups. I also thank Alan Jacobs and Yang-Yang Zhou for inviting me to record an episode of the Scope Conditions podcast that helped sharpen some of the arguments of the book. Jaimie Bleck, Vincenzo Bove, Chris Clary, Pierre Englebert, Jessica Gottlieb, Allison Grossman, Yvan Guichaoua, Lisa Hultman, Sabrina Karim, Gary King, Emily Ritter, Abdoulaye Sidibe, Jessica Steinberg, and Eric Stollenwerk also provided valuable comments on various parts of the manuscript.

Finally, thanks to my family for enduring the decade it took to finish this book. I am grateful to my mother, Andriana Vellis, for teaching me about politics and to my father, George Nomikos, for teaching me about science. Although my mother passed away just as I was finishing this book, it would not have been possible without the countless arguments about intervention we had over the years. I am grateful to Ezra and Ares for providing the best possible writing and play breaks over the past five years. Finally, thanks to Elana Resnick for everything – comments, conversation, support, and patience. You inspire and motivate me every day. This book is dedicated to you.
