Contributors

ROY BECK is the author of four books on U.S. population and the environment and on ethics and politics. A graduate of the University of Missouri School of Journalism, he was one of the nation's first environment-beat reporters. He began his career in the 1960s writing about the rapid rise of environmental and population advocacy into national movements. He has written on U.S. population issues periodically for more than three decades, and as Chief Washington Correspondent of the Booth Newspapers chain covered some of the decisions by Congress to speed up U.S. population growth by increasing immigration. U.S. population issues have been his primary focus of research, writing, and speaking for the past decade.

OTIS L. GRAHAM JR. is Professor of History at University of North Carolina, Wilmington. He is the author of many books on the environment, public policy and modern America and the editor of The Public Historian.

LEON KOLANKIEWICZ has a B.S. in forestry and wildlife management from Virginia Tech and an M.S. in environmental planning and natural resources management from the University of British Columbia. He has worked as an environmental professional for nearly 20 years, including stints with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, National Marine Fisheries Service, Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation, Alaska Department of Fish and Game, University of Washington, University of New Mexico, Orange County (California) Environmental Management Agency, and as a national parks technical advisor with the Peace Corps in Central America. As an environmental activist, he has volunteered with the Federation of Mountain Clubs of British Columbia, Alaska Environmental Lobby, Southeast Alaska Conservation Council, New Mexico Public Interest Research Group, Sierra Club, and Union of Concerned Scientists, among other organizations. He has written more than 70 articles and reports and is the author of Where Salmon Come to Die: An Autumn on Alaska's Raincoast (Boulder, Colorado: Pruett, 1993).

MICHAEL E. KRAFT is Professor of Public and Environmental Affairs at the University of Wisconsin, Green Bay. He is author of Environmental Policy and Politics (1996) and co-editor and contributing author of Environmental Policy (4th ed., 1999), and Toward Sustainable Communities: Transition and Transformations in Environmental Policy (1999).

https://doi.org/10.1353/jph.2000.0002 Published online by Cambridge University Press

MARTIN V. MELOSI is distinguished University Professor of History and Director of the Institute for Public History at the University of Houston. His most recent book is The Sanitary City: Urban Infrastructure in America form Colonial Times to the Present (Johns Hopkins, 2000).

DAVID VOGEL is a professor in the Haas School of Business and the Department of Political Science at the University of California, Berkeley. His books include Fluctuating Fortunes: The Political Power of Business in America (1989) and Trading Up: Consumer and Environmental Regulation in a Global Economy (1995).

https://doi.org/10.1353/jph.2000.0002 Published online by Cambridge University Press