https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781413000169 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Contributors, July 2013 (12.3)

Megan Birk is an assistant professor of history at the University of Texas, Pan American, where she teaches courses on food history, family and childhood history, and the Progressive Era. Birk's current project is a book manuscript about the partnership between dependent child welfare and midwestern farmers. She has previously published in Agricultural History and The Annals of Iowa.

Marie Bolton is an associate professor of American history at the University of Clermont-Ferrand II, France. Her publications on California and San Francisco history include, as co-author with Nancy C. Unger, "Housing Reconstruction after the Catastrophe: The Failed Promise of San Francisco's 1906 'Earthquake Cottages,'" Annales de démographie historique 2 (2010).

Joshua Britton recently completed his PhD in nineteenth-century American history at Lehigh University. His research focuses on the spatial relationship of the urban upper class to American cities during the nineteenth century. He is an adjunct professor of history at Gwynedd-Mercy College.

Jonathan Chausovsky is an associate professor of political science at SUNY-Fredonia. He has written on the development of state incorporation law and is working on a manuscript on the transition of business regulation from states to nation.

Brian M. Ingrassia teaches at Middle Tennessee State University. He is the author of The Rise of Gridiron University: Higher Education's Uneasy Alliance with Big-Time Football (2012). An article based on this research appeared in the January 2011 issue of this journal. He is also series editor of the University of Tennessee Press's Sport and Popular Culture series.

Robin E. Jensen is an assistant professor in the Department of Communication at the University of Utah. She is the author of Dirty Words: The Rhetoric of Public Sex Education (2010).

Jason McDonald is the author of American Ethnic History: Themes and Perspectives (2007) and Racial Dynamics in Early Twentieth-Century Austin, Texas (2012). He is currently working on a history of immigration policy under the Truman administration.

Laura Phillips Sawyer is a visiting scholar at the Political Theory Project at Brown University. She earned her doctorate in U.S. history at the University of Virginia in 2011. In 2013 she will begin the Newcomen fellowship at Harvard Business School.

Carolyn S. Vacca, associate professor of history at St. John Fisher College, also holds the title of county historian in Monroe County, New York. She recently curated an exhibit on Dr. George Goler, the pioneering public health officer in Rochester from 1896 to 1932. She is presently working on an article about Goler.

Jan Whitt, professor of literature and media at the University of Colorado at Boulder, has published numerous articles and books in American literature, media studies, and women's issues. Her recent books include Women in American Journalism: A New History (2008), Burning Crosses and Activist Journalism: Hazel Brannon Smith and the Mississippi Civil Rights Movement (2010), and Rain on a Strange Roof: A Southern Literary Memoir (2012).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781413000169 Published online by Cambridge University Press