Marko Aho received his PhD in ethnomusicology from the University of Tampere in 2002, and now holds an adjunct professorship there. Having also worked in the Sibelius-Academy and at the University of Jyväskylä, he is currently pursuing a degree in accordion building. He has published in Popular Music, Ethnomusicology Review, Journal of Interdisciplinary Music Studies, and Music Performance Research.

Phil Alexander is a third-year PhD candidate at SOAS, looking at klezmer and Yiddish music in Berlin. He is also an active musician and has recently completed a new film score for the Soviet silent classic, Salt for Svanetia.

Mike Anklewicz is a musician and independent scholar based in Toronto, Canada, where he studies klezmer in a variety of contexts. He holds a PhD in ethnomusicology from York University in Toronto and maintains a busy performing schedule as the leader of KlezFactor, and as a freelance saxophonist and clarinettist.

Sanubar Baghirova, PhD, specializes in research on the traditional music of Azerbaijan. She is the author of Azerbaijani Mugham (ELM, 2007), Azerbaijani Music and Musicians (TekNur, 2011), three UNESCO nominations (mugham, the art of ashiq, and Azerbaijani tar) inscribed on Lists of Intangible Cultural Heritage, as well as the documentary film The Ancient Arts of Mugham and Ashiq in the XXI Century (SOAS, 2013). She has recorded and released 27 CDs of Azerbaijani traditional music, including Azerbaijan: Anthology of Ashiq (2 CDs, INEDIT, 2008), Classical Heritage of Azerbaijani Ashiq (12 CDs, Ministry of Culture and Tourism of Azerbaijan Republic, 2010), and Traditional Music of Azerbaijan (7 CDs, Felmay Records, 2011– 2013).

Alexander M. Cannon holds a PhD from the University of Michigan and serves as an assistant professor in the School of Music at Western Michigan University. His research investigates creativity in spheres of southern Vietnamese traditional music performance, and is published in Ethnomusicology and the Journal of Vietnamese Studies.

Florian Carl is senior lecturer in ethnomusicology and currently head of the Department of Music and Dance at the University of Cape Coast, Ghana. His research interests are in music, media, and religion in Ghana and its diaspora.

James Revell Carr received his PhD in ethnomusicology from the University of California at Santa Barbara, and is currently associate professor of ethnomusicology at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. His book, Hawaiian Music in Motion: Mariners, Missionaries, and Minstrels (University of Illinois Press, 2014) focuses on cross-cultural musical interactions in the nineteenth century.

Pedro de Niemeyer Cesarino, PhD, is a professor at the Department of Anthropology, University of São Paulo, Brazil. He is the author of Oniska: poética do xamanismo na Amazônia (Perspectiva, 2011) and Quando a Terra deixou de falar: cantos da mitologia marubo (Editora 34, 2013), as well as many articles.

Judith Cohen is adjunct faculty at York University (Toronto). She received her doctorate in ethnomusicology from the Université de Montréal. She is active both as a scholar and singer, specializing in Sephardic music, music in the lives of Portuguese Crypto-Jews, and related traditions, including Balkan and medieval music. She is the Spain editor of the Alan Lomax recordings.

Andrea Conger received her PhD in social-cultural anthropology in May 2015 from Indiana University. She holds an MA in ethnochoreology from the Irish World Academy of Music and Dance in Limerick, Ireland, a BA from St. Olaf College, USA, and has danced professionally in the USA and Hungary.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.47.2015.0243 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Ben Doleac is a PhD candidate in ethnomusicology at the University of California, Los Angeles. He is presently conducting dissertation fieldwork on contemporary drummers, local traditions, and cultural identity in New Orleans.

George Worlasi Kwasi Dor is professor of music and McDonnell Barksdale Chair of Ethnomusicology at the University of Mississippi. He received his PhD in music from the University of Pittsburgh. Dor's publications include West African Drumming and Dance in North American Universities: An Ethnomusicological Perspective (2014).

Pedro Félix is an anthropologist and integrated researcher of the Instituto de Etnomusicologia—Centro de Estudos em Música e Dança at Universidade Nova de Lisboa. He coordinates the digital sound archive of the fado museum in Lisbon. His research interests include music and heritage, fado, technology, sound archives, popular music, and music industries.

Catherine E. Foley is founding course director of both the MA ethnochoreology and the MA Irish traditional dance performance programmes, University of Limerick, Ireland. She also supervises doctoral research in dance (academic-based and practice-based). She is author of Step Dancing in Ireland: Culture and History (Ashgate, 2013) and Irish Traditional Step Dancing in North Kerry (North Kerry Literary Trust, 2012). She is chair of the International Council for Traditional Music's Study Group on Ethnochoreology.

Kate Galloway is a postdoctoral fellow and lecturer at the Research Centre for the Study of Music, Media, and Place (MMaP) at Memorial University of Newfoundland. Her research addresses experimental music practices, music and global environmental change, sound studies, critical geography, technology and media studies, visual culture, and digital humanities.

Chris Goertzen, a University of Illinois product, teaches at the University of Southern Mississippi. He co-edited the Europe volume of The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music, and authored Fiddling for Norway: Revival and Identity (1997), Southern Fiddlers and Fiddle Contests (2008), and Made in Mexico: Tradition, Tourism, and Political Ferment in Oaxaca (2010).

Fredara Mareva Hadley is a visiting assistant professor of musicology at Oberlin College. Her research focuses on contemporary African American popular music. Committed to public sharing of ethnomusicological knowledge, she offers to the public walking tours of New York City that map black music's imprint on the city.

Adriana Helbig is an associate professor of music at the University of Pittsburgh. She is the author of Hip Hop Ukraine: Music, Race, and African Migration (Indiana University Press, 2014) and co-author with Oksana Buranbaeva and Vanja Mladineo of Culture and Customs of Ukraine (Greenwood Press, 2008).

Laura Houle is a doctoral candidate at Texas Tech University in Lubbock, Texas. Her research encompasses American vernacular music with a focus on Texas fiddling. An active Texas fiddler, she performs regularly in Lubbock band "Flatland Cavalry," and is heard on various Texas music albums and documentary soundtracks.

Tala Jarjour completed a PhD in music as a Gates Scholar at the University of Cambridge. She was assistant professor of music at New York University Abu Dhabi in New York City before joining the departments of music and anthropology at the University of Notre Dame as assistant professor. In 2015/16 she is Senior ISM Fellow in Sacred Music, Worship, and the Arts at Yale University, and American Fellow of the American Association of University Women at the University of Cambridge.

Greg Johnson is the curator for the Blues Archive at the University of Mississippi. He received his master of library and information science from the University of Southern Mississippi in 2002. Greg is the co-author of 100 Books Every Blues Fan Should Own

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.47.2015.0243 Published online by Cambridge University Press

(Roman and Littlefield, 2014) and was the consulting editor for the Encyclopedia of the Blues (Routledge, 2006).

Jaime Jones is the head of the School of Music and lecturer in ethnomusicology at University College Dublin. She completed her PhD in ethnomusicology at the University of Chicago in 2009. Recent publications include "Singing the Way: Music and Pilgrimage in Maharashtra" (Ethnomusicology Ireland, May 2015) and the chapter "Music, History and the Sacred in South Asia" (Cambridge History of World Music, December 2013).

Deborah Justice is the Schragis Postdoctoral Fellow in the Department of Art and Music Histories at Syracuse University. President-elect of the Society for Ethnomusicology's section on Religion, Music, and Sound, her research focuses on how modern people find meaning in musical traditions, religious and otherwise. She has played the hammered dulcimer since childhood and has recently taken up claw-hammer banjo.

Ivana Katarinčić has been working at the Institute of Ethnology and Folklore Research in Zagreb, Croatia since 2005. She holds a PhD from the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences of the University of Zagreb. Her research deals with the subject of dance forms, historical dances, ballroom dances, and classical ballet.

Peter Manuel has researched and published extensively on musics of India, the Caribbean, Spain, and elsewhere. He teaches ethnomusicology at John Jay College and the Graduate Center of the City University of New York. A former sitarist, he now plays in a New Jersey bagpipe band.

Pirkko Moisala is professor of musicology and ethnomusicology at the University of Helsinki. Her publications include Cultural Cognition in Music (1991), Musiikin toinen sukupuoli (The other sex of music, 1994), Music and Gender (2000), Gender and Qualitative Methods (2003), and Kaija Saariaho (2009). Her current projects are Deleuzian Music Research (www.helsinki.fi/deleuzian/) and Indigenous Musics and Well-Being.

Anna Morcom's research focuses on phases of modernity ranging from nation-building to globalization and neoliberalism, and spans issues of politics, ideology, gender, and inequality as well as media and marketization. She is the author of three books, Unity and Discord: Music and Politics in Contemporary Tibet (Tibet Information Network, 2004), Hindi Film Songs and the Cinema (Ashgate, 2007), and Illicit Worlds of Indian Dance: Cultures of Exclusion (C. Hurst; OUP New York, 2013). Her latest research explores music in the context of capitalism and economic ethnomusicology more generally. She is currently a reader in the music department at Royal Holloway, University of London.

Sylvia Nannyonga-Tamusuza is an associate professor of music, coordinator of the Ethnomusicology in Uganda projects and curator at Makerere University Klaus Wachsmann Music Archives. She has published on popular music, music and gender, music and politics, interaction of ethnomusicology and music education, archiving music and dance, as well as "African" music in Norway and Sweden.

Dave Pier is assistant professor in the Department of African, African-American, and Diaspora Studies at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. His book, forthcoming from Palgrave, is titled Ugandan Music in the Marketing Era: The Branded Arena.

Carine Plancke holds a PhD in social anthropology from the School of Advanced Studies in Social Sciences in Paris and the Catholic University of Leuven. She is currently a Marie Curie Research fellow at the Centre for Dance Research of the University of Roehampton.

Marilou Polymeropoulou has a background in musicology, anthropology, and new media. In her DPhil (Oxon) thesis she investigated chipmusic creativity and the significance of social network connectedness for chip musicians. Currently, she is engaged with academic publishing on the subject of digital ethnomusicology and involved with the Song Collectors Collective.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.47.2015.0243 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Michalis Poupazis is a PhD student and lecturer in ethnomusicology at University College Cork. His doctoral work explores the cultural world of Greek- and Turkish-speaking Cypriots, aiming to make findings from the diaspora available as a resource for improving intercommunal relations in Cyprus. He is currently a committee member and the newsletter editor for both ICTM Ireland and IASPM UK and Ireland.

Amir Hosein Pourjavady studied ethnomusicology at the CUNY Graduate Center, and Near Eastern languages and cultures at UCLA. He taught music at the University of Tehran and has published numerous articles on the history, theory, and performance practice of Persian music.

Robert C. Provine is professor emeritus at the University of Maryland. He holds the PhD in music from Harvard. He researches the music of East Asia, with a particular focus on Korean traditional music and a disciplinary emphasis on historical ethnomusicology. He is the author of Essays on Sino-Korean Musicology: Early Sources for Korean Ritual Music (1988) and numerous articles in various journals.

Rumya S. Putcha (PhD, University of Chicago, 2011) is an assistant professor of music and performance studies in the Department of Performance Studies at Texas A&M University. Her book, Mythical Courtesans | Modern Wives: Women, Dance, and Sexual Praxis in Modern South India, examines the relationship between dance and affect, gender and sexuality, identity and cultural intimacy, and historiography within the modern Indian nation state. Her upcoming research focuses on constructions of race, mass media, and American political identity in country music genres. Trained as an Indian classical dancer in both bharatanaytam and kuchipudi styles, she is also a professional soprano, performing in chapel choirs in both Boston and Chicago over the past ten years.

A. J. Racy is professor of ethnomusicology at the University of California, Los Angeles. His numerous publications include the award-winning Making Music in the Arab World (Cambridge University Press, 2003). Racy is a well-known composer, recording artist, and multi-instrumentalist who performs and lectures throughout the world.

Selena Rakočević is an associate professor at the Department for Ethnomusicology, Faculty of Music in Belgrade and at the Academy of Arts in Novi Sad. Her professional interests are musical and dance traditions of Banat and Vojvodina in light of multicultural and multiethnic contexts; ethnochoreology; music/dance relationships; and contemporary music and dance.

Ruth E. Rosenberg is associate professor of music at the University of Illinois at Chicago. She is the author of Music, Travel, and Imperial Encounter in Nineteenth-Century France: Musical Apprehensions (Routledge Studies in Ethnomusicology, 2015).

Matt Sakakeeny is an ethnomusicologist and associate professor of music at Tulane University in New Orleans. He is the author of Roll With It: Brass Bands in the Streets of New Orleans (2013), and co-editor with David Novak of Keywords in Sound (2014), both published by Duke University Press.

Hiromi Lorraine Sakata is professor emerita of ethnomusicology at the University of California, Los Angeles. Her research interest in Afghan music spans over four decades, from 1966 to the present. Her publications include Music in the Mind: The Concepts of Music and Musician in Afghanistan; Afghanistan Encounters with Music and Friends; and Ustad Mohammad Omar: Virtuoso from Afghanistan.

Christopher J. Smith is professor, chair of musicology, and director of the Vernacular Music Center at Texas Tech University. His scholarly monograph, The Creolization of

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.47.2015.0243 Published online by Cambridge University Press

American Culture (Illinois), won the Irving Lowens Book Award from the Society for American Music. He is the composer of the theatrical show Dancing at the Crossroads and a published poet.

Gorda Stan is a PhD student in the Social Science Department at Maxwell School, Syracuse University. Her areas of specialization are social and critical theory, anthropology, culture, art, activism, and continental philosophy. She is currently writing her dissertation on art-based projects aimed at experimental self-organizing, social bonding, and attunement to political attachment in the twenty-first century United States.

Celia Tuchman-Rosta is a PhD candidate in the Department of Anthropology at the University of California, Riverside. Her research investigates how tourism and globalization impact the embodied experiences of Cambodian dancers. Her work is supported by the Center for Khmer Studies, Fulbright IIE, and a Chancellors Distinguished Fellowship Award (UCR).

Jadranka Važanová (PhD, Graduate Center of the City University of New York, 2008) is senior editor at the Répertoire International de Littérature Musicale (RILM) in New York. She has published on music of ethnic groups, transformation processes in musical cultures of Europe, and on ceremonial wedding songs of Slavic peoples.

Charlotte Vignau is an ethnomusicologist, musicologist, and visual anthropologist. She completed her PhD at the University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands in 2008. Vignau is author of the book Modernity, Complex Societies and the Alphorn (2013), which encompasses the film The Alphorn. Her research focuses on alphorn playing as a transnational phenomenon and filmmaking as ethnographic method in ethnomusicology.

Domenico Di Virgilio is an Italian ethnomusicologist and has a university degree in Oriental languages. Since 1977 he has carried out fieldwork in Northern India and Central Italy. He teaches music in public schools and his research interests include vocal music, timbre, and analysis of sounds.

Kathleen Wiens is curator for the European collection and gallery at the Musical Instrument Museum, Phoenix. She obtained her PhD in ethnomusicology from University of California, Los Angeles in 2012. An article based on her fieldwork with Serbian Jewish singers appears in Ethnomusicology Forum 23/1 (2014).

J. Lawrence Witzleben is professor of ethnomusicology at the University of Maryland and a senior research fellow at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. He has written extensively about Chinese instrumental music (including the book Silk and Bamboo Music in Shanghai; Kent State, 1995) and ethnomusicology theory.

Michiyo Yoneno-Reyes, PhD, is an associate professor of the Asian Center, University of the Philippines. She has published articles on music and culture of the Philippines. She is currently preparing a book manuscript on folksong and modernity of the indigenous peoples of the northern Philippine highlands. She has also recently engaged in filmmaking, producing two films on Kalinga music.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.47.2015.0243 Published online by Cambridge University Press