JURY SELECTION PROCEDURES
Our Uncertain Commitment to Representative Juries

Jon Van Dyke, School of Law, University of Hawaii, Manoa

A critical investigation of the nation's jury system based on data collected from the federal courts and a large number of state jurisdictions. Mr. Van Dyke concludes that current procedures of jury selection fall significantly short of producing juries representative of all segments of the population and recommends reforms for overcoming discriminatory practices. $15.00

SOCIAL RESEARCH IN CONFLICT WITH LAW AND ETHICS

Paul Nejelski, Judicial Department, State of Connecticut, Editor

The researcher's "right" to information and his immunity to legal liability are the topics of these papers by internationally known scholars from the fields of law and social science. They present arguments for and against legislative solutions, past and present, and conclude with a model statute creating testimonial privilege for social science researchers.

Available $15.00

LIMITS OF JUSTICE
The Courts' Role in School Desegregation

Edited by Howard I. Kalodner, Institute of Judicial Administration

Killing:

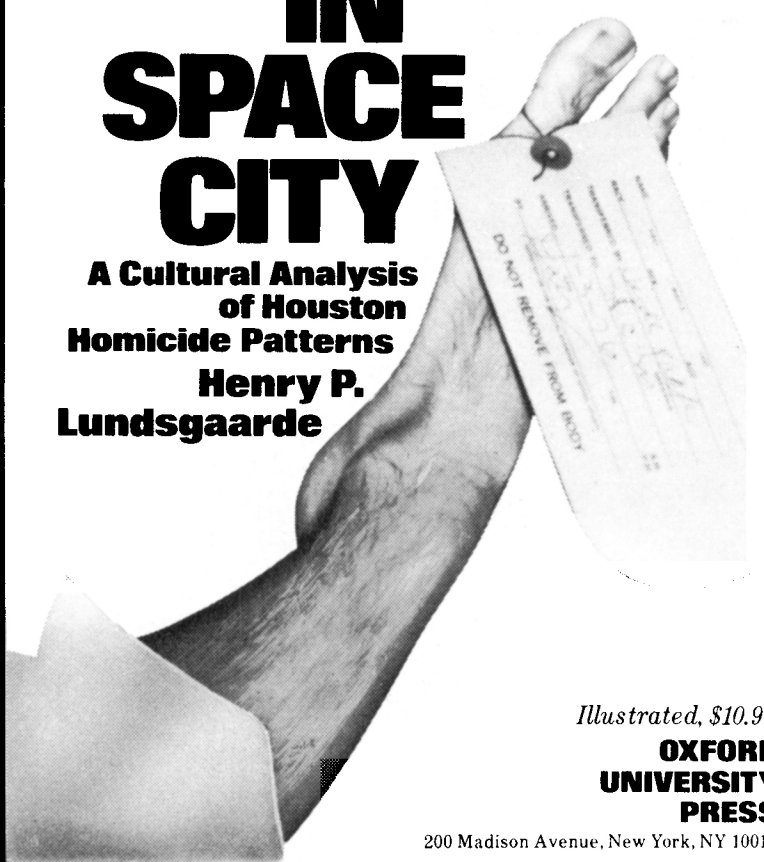

Is it deep in the heart of Texans?

Bringing a new perspective to the question of urban violence, a cultural anthropologist looks for social factors to explain why Houston saw nearly 300 homicides in 1969—and why more than half the killers escaped all legal sanctions. "The most interesting, because it's the best researched, study of gun violence I've encountered."
—Robert Sherrill

Action and Interaction: the latest on the law and society

Murder, Inequality, and the Law: Differential Treatment and the Legal Process
Victoria Lynn Swigert, Ronald A. Farrell, State University of New York
This discussion of the differential treatment of minorities involved in murder cases covers all aspects of the mechanics of the law.
In Press Winter/Spring 1977

Let's Make a Deal: Negotiating Justice
John F. Klein, University of Calgary
Exploration of the dynamics of the negotiating process, viewed from the position of the offender. Concludes that the net result of negotiated justice is a decrease in the offender's perception of the legitimacy of the criminal justice system.
176pp. $13.50

Toward a National Health Policy: Public Policy and the Control of Health Care Costs
Kenneth M. Friedman, Purdue University, Stuart H. Rakoff, United Mine Workers Health and Retirement Fund
