Contributors

ANADELI BENCOMO, professor in and chair of the Department of Hispanic Studies at the University of Houston, has written two books on Mexican narrative journalism and coedited a volume on transnational studies. Her current book projects include an exploration of contemporary Mexican authors called "[S]election of Reading[s]" and a study of journalistic accounts of narcoviolence by the writers of Generación ¡Bang!

WENDY B. FARIS is distinguished research professor in (and former chair of) the English department at the University of Texas, Arlington. Her publications include Carlos Fuentes (1983), Labyrinths of Language: Symbolic Landscape and Narrative Design in Modern Fiction (1988), and Ordinary Enchantments: Magical Realism and the Remystification of Narrative (2004). With Lois Parkinson Zamora she coedited Magical Realism: Theory, History, Community (1995). She is working on Carlos Fuentes, Ben Okri, and the relations between modernist painting and literature.

GEORGINA GARCÍA GUTIÉRREZ VÉLEZ is a professor in the graduate literature division at the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (UNAM), a researcher at UNAM's Centro de Estudios Literarios del Instituto de Investigaciones Filológicas, and a former member of the MLA Delegate Assembly. She is the author of Los disfraces: La obra mestiza de Carlos Fuentes (1981), as well as of dozens of articles on Mexican authors, and has edited anthologies including Carlos Fuentes: Relectura de su obra: Los días enmascarados y Cantar de ciegos (1995), Carlos Fuentes desde la crítica (2001), Heriberto Frías: La escritura enjuiciada (2008), and La región más transparente en el siglo XXI: Homenaje a Carlos Fuentes (2012). Her current book project explores Carlos Fuentes's poetics.

JOHN OCHOA, associate professor in the Spanish and comparative literature departments at Penn State University, University Park, teaches Latin American intellectual and cultural history and United States Latino literature. His current book project, "Fellow Travelers," pairs works of travel literature from the United States and Latin America that share an interest in masculinity, empire, and the formation of official culture.

FLORENCE OLIVIER, professor of comparative literature at the Université de Paris III Sorbonne Nouvelle, is a specialist in Latin American literature, a translator, and a coeditor of the journal América. Besides many articles and her contributions to the critical editions of Los días terrenales, by José Revueltas, and Toda la obra, by Juan Rulfo (ALLCA XX, 1996), she is the author of Carlos Fuentes ou l'imagination de l'autre (Aden, 2009). She organized the international conference Les Lettres de Relation de Carlos Fuentes in 2011, attended by the author, and, for the Instituto Cervantes, created a walking tour of Paris organized around Fuentes's life and works and available online (paris.rutascervantes.es/ruta/carlosfuentes).

ELENA PONIATOWSKA, an honorary fellow of the MLA, is a journalist and fiction writer living in Mexico City. Often focusing on social justice, her more than forty books include testimonial narratives about modern Mexico as seen through the eyes of a poor woman (Hasta no verte Jesús mío [1969]), about the massacre of student protesters in 1968 (La noche de Tlatelolco [1971]), and about the earthquake that struck Mexico City in 1985 (Nada, nadie: Las voces del temblor [1988]). Many of her writings chronicle the lives of assertive women—such as Las soldaderas (1999), about female participants in the Mexican Revolution, and biographical novels about the artists Angelina Beloff and Leonora Carrington. Among other awards, she received the Premio Alfaguara de Novela for the novel La piel del cielo (2001) and the Premio Internacional de Novela Rómulo Gallegos for El tren pasa primero (2005), another novel. De noche vienes (1979) and Tlapalería (2003) are volumes of stories. Her newspaper interviews with intellectuals, politicians, and others are collected in Todo México (8 vols.; 1991–2003).

LUZ RODRÍGUEZ CARRANZA is professor and chair of Latin American languages and literatures at Leiden University, in the Netherlands. She coordinates the research project Reframing Reality, which studies the current uses of mimesis and text performance in Latin American poetry, narrative, and theater. In this role, she analyzes the work of the Argentinean director and playwright Rafael Spregelburd.

JOSÉ RAMÓN RUISÁNCHEZ, assistant professor of Spanish at the University of Houston, is writing a book on the representation of friendship in Latin American narrative.

MAARTEN VAN DELDEN, professor of Latin American literature at the University of California, Los Angeles, is the author of Carlos Fuentes, Mexico, and Modernity (1998) and a coauthor (with Yvon Grenier) of Gunshots at the Fiesta: Literature and Politics in Latin America (2009). He is writing a book on literary and cultural relations between Mexico and the United States in the second half of the twentieth century.

https://doi.org/10.1632/S0030812900123053 Published online by Cambridge University Press