Contributors

RAMSES AMER is a senior research fellow at the Center for Pacific Asia Studies (CPAS), Stockholm University, Sweden. His major areas of research are security issues and conflict resolution in Southeast Asia and the wider Pacific Asia and the role of the United Nations in the international system. He is the author of The Sino-Vietnamese Approach to Managing Boundary Disputes, Maritime Briefing, Vol. 3, No. 5 (Durham: International Boundaries Research Unit, University of Durham, 2002). He is co-editor, with Carlyle A. Thayer, of Vietnamese Foreign Policy in Transition (Singapore: Institute for Southeast Asian Studies; New York: St Martin's Press, 1999).

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London.

CHRIS BERRY is the professor of film and television studies in the department of media and communication at Goldsmiths College, London. His research is focused on Chinese cinemas and other Chinese screen-based media, with a particular interest in gender, sexuality and the post-colonial politics of time and space. His latest publications include (with Mary Farquhar) Cinema and the National: China on Screen (Columbia University Press and Hong Kong University Press, 2006) and Postsocialist Cinema in Post-Mao China: The Cultural Revolution after the Cultural Revolution (Routledge, 2004).

LUCIEN BIANCO is professor emeritus of history at the École des hautes études en sciences sociales in Paris. His most recent book, written with the collaboration of Hua Chang-ming, Jacqueries et Révolution dans la Chine du XX^{e} siècle, Paris 2005, won the Augustin-Thierry prize (2005).

VICTOR BRAJER is a professor in the department of economics at California State University–Fullerton. His research focus is on environmental and natural resource economics, and he has extensive experience in the study of air pollution and its effects on human health.

ALAN DE BRAUW is research fellow at the International Food Policy Research Institute, Washington DC.

KJELD ERIK BRØDSGAARD is professor and director of the Asia Research Centre, the Copenhagen Business School. His most recent book is Hainan: State, Society and Business in a Chinese Province (Routledge, 2008). His current research focuses on cadre reform, party building and public management in China.

SZU-CHI CHEN is a PhD candidate at the Asian and Middle Eastern Studies Department, Cambridge University. The title of his thesis is "Intellectuals Re-Positioning and The Search for Utopia in Post-Mao."

JAE HO CHUNG is professor of international relations at Seoul National University and founding co-ordinator of Asian Network for the Study of Local China (ANSLoC). He is the editor of Charting China's Future (Rowman & Littlefield, 2006) and author of Between Ally and Partner: Korea-China Relations and the United States (Columbia University Press, 2007).

DELIA DAVIN is emeritus professor of Chinese studies at the University of Leeds.

JUNE TEUFEL DREYER is professor of political science at the University of Miami and author of China's Political System: Modernization and Tradition, now in its sixth edition. She is currently working on a study of Sino-Japanese relations.

HARRIET EVANS is professor of Chinese cultural studies at the Centre for the Study of Democracy, University of Westminster. Her publications include Women and Sexuality in China: Discourses of Female Sexuality and Gender since 1949 (Polity Press, 1997); Picturing Power in the People's Republic of China: Posters of the Cultural Revolution (co-edited with Stephanie Donald,

© The China Quarterly, 2008 doi:10.1017/S0305741008000489

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000489 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Rowman and Littlefield, 1999), and The Subject of Gender: Daughters and Mothers in Urban China (Rowman and Littlefield, 2007). Her current research projects include an oral history of everyday life in "south Beijing" (Dashilanr), and an ethnographic study of Chinese perspectives on propaganda posters, in collaboration with Stephanie Hemelryk Donald, (Posters of the Cultural Revolution: Contemporary Chinese Perspectives on an Era of Propaganda), funded by the Australian Research Council.

ROSSELLA FERRARI is lecturer in modern Chinese culture and language at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.

POSHEK FU is professor of history and cinema studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. He is the author of Passivity, Resistance, and Collaboration: Intellectual Choices in Occupied Shanghai, 1937–1945 (Stanford University Press, 1993) and Between Shanghai and Hong Kong: The Politics of Chinese Cinemas (Stanford University Press, 2003).

SUSAN GLOSSER is associate professor of history at Lewis and Clark College in Portland, Oregon. She is currently working on a book on women's daily lives under the Japanese occupation of Shanghai.

YONG GUO is assistant professor in the school of public policy and management at Tsinghua University, Beijing.

ANDREW HALPER holds degrees in Chinese and in Law from the University of British Columbia and in Law from the University of Paris. He is partner and head of China practice at Eversheds, a London-based law firm, and divides his time between London and Shanghai. He is also research associate at the University of Oxford's Institute for Chinese Studies. He worked in Beijing from 1991 to 1998, first as a Canadian diplomat and then as a lawyer.

CHRISTOPHER HUGHES is reader in international relations at the |London School of Economics and Political Science, specializing in Chinese politics and foreign policy.

RYOSEI KOKUBUN is dean and professor of faculty of law and politics at Keio University. He is currently president of the Japan Association of International Relations and former president of the Japan Association for Asian Studies. He has published many books and articles on China's domestic politics and foreign relations including, co-edited with Wang Jisi, The Rise of China and a Changing East Asian Order (Brookings Institute Press, 2004).

QIANG LI IS research associate at the Center for Chinese Agricultural Policy, Institute for Geographical Sciences, Chinese Academy of Sciences.

CHENGFANG LIU is a PhD student in the department of agricultural economics, University of California, Davis.

CHARLES (CHAS) MCKHANN is professor of anthropology at Whitman College. He studies religion, cultural history, ethnicity, kinship, tourism and art among the Naxi and other Tibeto-Burman nationalities of southwest China.

ROBERT W. MEAD is currently an assistant professor in the department of economics at California State University–Fullerton. His research focuses on various development and transition issues in China where he has had several articles published.

MARC L. MOSKOWITZ is an assistant professor in the department of anthropology at the University of South Carolina. He is a recipient of the Fulbright-Hays, Fulbright, and Chiang Ching-Kuo awards. He is the author of The Haunting Fetus: Abortion, Sexuality and the Spirit World in Taiwan (University of Hawai'i Press, 2001) and co-editor of The Minor Arts of Daily Life: Popular Culture in Taiwan (University of Hawai'i Press, 2004).

SUSAN NAQUIN is professor of history at Princeton University. She works on the cultural and social history of early modern China, and has a particular interest in material culture. Her most recent book, Peking: Temples and City Life 1400–1900, was published in 2000.

JANE NOLAN is a senior research fellow at Magdalene College, the University of Cambridge. Her current research examines the social networks of foreign and local financial experts in Hong Kong and

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000489 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Shanghai as part of a Nuffield Foundation Fellowship.

NYIRI PÁL is a senior lecturer and director of the applied anthropology programme at Macquarie University, Sydney. His main research areas are Chinese migration and tourism. His latest books are Chinese in Eastern Europe and Russia (Routledge, 2007), China Can't Stop Saying No (http://chinasaysno.wordpress.com, 2007), and, with Joana Breidenbach, Maxikulti (Campus, 2008).

JENNIFER PURTLE is assistant professor of Chinese and East Asian art history at the University of Toronto.

SCOTT ROZELLE IS Helen Farnsworth senior fellow and professor at the Shorenstein-Asia Pacific Research Center, Freeman Spogli Institute, Stanford University and the department of agricultural economics, University of California, Davis.

MICHAEL SCHOENHALS is senior lecturer in the Centre for Languages and Literature, Lund University, and senior research fellow in the Central Asia-Caucasus Institute Silk Road Studies Program, Uppsala University, Sweden. His most recent book, co-authored with Roderick MacFarquhar is Mao's Last Revolution (Harvard University Press, 2006).

INJOO SOHN is assistant professor at the department of politics and public administration, the University of Hong Kong. Prior to joining the University of Hong Kong, he was a postdoctoral fellow in the Princeton-Harvard China and the World Program (PHCWP) and visiting research fellow with the Princeton Institute for International and Regional Studies (PIIRS), Princeton University. He also taught at the George Washington University, consulted for the Intergovernmental Group of 24 (G-24) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), and worked for the US Congress (the Subcommittee on International Terrorism and Non-Proliferation).

STIG THØGERSEN is professor of China studies, East Asian department, Institute of History and Area Studies, Aarhus University, Denmark. His research interest is social, political and cultural change in rural China. He is the author of A County of Culture (University of Michigan Press, 2002) and has recently co-edited (with Maria Heimer) Doing Fieldwork in China (NIAS Press/University of Hawai'i Press, 2006).

ERIC THUN is the Peter Moores university lecturer in Chinese business studies at Oxford's Said Business School. He recently published Changing Lanes in China: Foreign Direct Investment, Local Governments, and Auto Sector Development (Cambridge University Press, 2006).

YUE-MAN YEUNG is professor emeritus of geography and research professor, Hong Kong Institute of Asia-Pacific Studies, The Chinese University of Hong Kong.

JUNWEI YU is assistant professor at National Taiwan Sport University (Taichung Campus). His research focuses on sport and politics, sport history and sport sociology.

LINXIU ZHANG is deputy director and professor at the Center for Chinese Agricultural Policy, Institute for Geographical Sciences, Chinese Academy of Science, Beijing.

ZHENG TIANTIAN is assistant professor of sociology at State University of New York, Cortland, and co-ordinator of Asian/Middle Eastern studies.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000489 Published online by Cambridge University Press