Association News

597 APSA 2009–10 Committee Slate
606 105th Annual Meeting
608 Briefs
610 Coming in the Next Issue
611 Washington Insider
612 Center Page

APSA Nominating Committee Offers Slate for the 2009–10 Officers and Council Members

On February 21, after careful deliberation and consideration of the association's bylaws and the council's charge as articulated by president Peter Katzenstein, and after canvassing the membership for suggestions as articulated in the APSA Constitution, the 2008–09 Nominating Committee submitted the following slate of elective officers. Once approved, these positions will begin September 2009. In its deliberations, the committee was mindful of giving due regard to diversity, geographical distribution, fields of professional interest, type of institution, academic/nonacademic employment status, as well as to the Council's guidance to take into account non-Ph.D.-granting institutions in the nomination of candidates, and to avoid selecting a nominee for president of the same gender for more than two consecutive years.

The 2008–09 APSA Nominating Committee consisted of Amrita Basu, Amherst College; Lisa Garcia Bedolla, University of California, Irvine; Peter A. Hall, Harvard University; Miles Kahler, University of California, San Diego, chair; K.C. Morrison, University of Missouri, Columbia; and H.W. Perry, University of Texas, Austin.

PRESIDENT-ELECT NOMINEE, 2009–10

Carole Pateman, UCLA

Carole Pateman is distinguished professor of political science at UCLA and honorary professor in the School of European Studies (EUROS) at Cardiff University (UK). During 2006–08 she was research professor at EUROS.

Her research interests are broad ranging but lie particularly in democratic theory and early modern and modern political theory, especially theories of original contracts and contemporary contract theory, all of which she has for many years approached with a feminist eye. She has also written about political obligation and is interested in some policy questions about the welfare state, including the right to a decent standard of living. At present, she is continuing her research on the idea of a basic income for all citizens. A book about her work, Illusion of Consent (edited by Daniel O'Neill, Mary Shanley, and Iris Young) was published in 2008.

Her recent publications include Justice and Democracy (2004; edited with Keith Dowding and Robert Goodin). Her latest book, Contract and Domination (2007; co-authored with Charles Mills), takes her research in a new direction analyzing the doctrine of terra nullius and its role in the colonization of the southern and northern New Worlds, and the intersection of racial and sexual power structures. Her earlier publications include Participation and Democratic Theory (1970); The Problem of Political Obligation (1979; 2nd ed. 1985); The Sexual Contract (1998), which received the Victoria Schuck Award in 1989 and the Benjamin Lippincott Award in 2005; and The Disorder of Women (1989). She has also published numerous book chapters and articles in journals.

Carole Pateman was born and educated in England and, although she left school at 16, later received her D.Phil from Oxford University. Her career has been international; she has lived in four continents and taught in three. From 1991–94 she served as (the first woman) president of the International Political Science Association. During 1980–81 she was president of the Australasian Political Studies Association. She was a member of the Council of the APSA, 1985–87. She currently serves as a member of the International Advisory Board for the Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study in the Social Sciences.

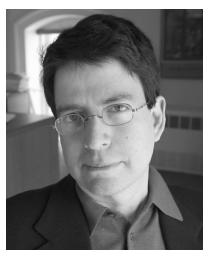

She continues to be a member of the editorial boards of a number of journals, including the British Journal of Political Science and the APSR, and is an associate editor of the Journal of Political Philosophy. She is also the series editor of the Ethikon Series in Comparative Ethics.

She has held a Guggenheim Fellowship and fellowships at the Centre for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences, Stanford, and the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton. In 1996 she was elected as a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. She received a Lifetime Achievement Award from the UK Political Studies Association in 2004, and in 2007 she was elected to the British Academy. She has been a fellow of the Academy of Social Sciences in Australia since 1980. She holds honorary degrees from the Australian National University, the National University of Ireland and Helsinki University.

VICE PRESIDENT NOMINEE, 2009–10

Michael A. Jones-Correa, Cornell University

Michael Jones-Correa is professor of government and director of the American Studies Program at Cornell University. He is the author of Between Two Nations: The Political Predicament of Latinos in New York City (Cornell, 1998), the editor of Governing American Cities: Inter-Ethnic Coalitions, Competition and

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Conflict (Russell Sage Foundation, 2001), and the author of more than two dozen articles and chapters on immigration, race, ethnicity, and citizenship in the United States. Professor Jones-Correa is currently working on several major projects, among them one looking at increasing ethnic diversity of suburbs, and its implication for local and national politics; another a multi-authored analyses of the 2006 Latino National Survey, a national state-stratified survey of Latinos in the United States for which he was a principal investigator; and collaborative research on new fast-growing immigrant-receiving areas. Jones-Correa has been a visiting fellow at the Russell Sage Foundation from 1998–99, the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars from 2003–04, and will be a senior research scholar at the Center for the Study of Democratic Politics at Princeton in from 2009–10. In 2004–05 he served on the Committee on the Redesign of US Naturalization Test for the National Academy of Sciences.

Jones-Correa has been an active participant in the APSA, serving as co-chair of the Committee on the Status of Latinos and Latinas in the profession, as co-program chair for the Race and Ethnic Politics section, as a member of the APSA Council, and currently as both a member of the APSA president's taskforce Political Science in the 21st Century and as co-president of the section on Race and Politics. He is a strong supporter of multiple approaches to political science, carried out by a diverse membership, reflecting and addressing contemporary issues and society.

VICE PRESIDENT NOMINEE, 2009–10

Jane Y. Junn, University of Southern California

Jane Junn was educated at the University of Michigan and the University of Chicago. Until 2009 she was a professor at Rutgers University in political science and the Eagleton Institute of Politics. In addition to numerous articles and chapters on political behavior and attitudes in the United States, race and ethnicity, and the politics of immigration, Professor Junn has written Education and Democratic Citizenship in America (with Norman H. Nie and Kenneth Stehlik-Barry, University of Chicago Press, 1996), Civic Education: What Makes Students Learn (with Richard G. Niemi, Yale University Press, 1998), and New Race Politics: Understanding Minority and Immigrant Politics (edited with Kerry L. Haynie, Cambridge University Press, 2008). Her first book won the Woodrow Wilson prize from the APSA for the best book published in political science in 1997. She has been a Fulbright Senior Scholar and a recipient of an Outstanding Teacher Award from Columbia University Teachers College while she was the Sussman Visiting Professor. She has been a member of the Social Science Research Council National Research Commission on Elections and Voting and a member of the National Academy of Science Committee on the U.S. Naturalization Test Redesign. Together with Taeku Lee, Karthick Ramakrishnan, and Janelle Wong, Professor Junn is a co-investigator of the 2008 National Asian American Survey. She is currently writing a book about political participation and racial and ethnic identity in the U.S.

In service to the association, Professor Junn was the 2008 APSA annual meeting program co-chair with Ed Keller. She has also been chair of the APSA Committee on the Status of Asian Pacific Americans in the Profession, and a member of the APSA Committee on the Status of Women in the Profession. In 2003, Professor Junn was the APSA annual meeting program division organizer for participation and public opinion, and in 2005 she was the APSA program division organizer for race, ethnicity, and politics. Professor Junn has been a member of the APSA Minority Programs Review Committee, and was chair of the Pi Sigma Alpha Award committee of the MPSA in 2008. She currently serves on the editorial boards of the Journal of Politics, Polity, and the Ralph Bunche Journal of Public Affairs, and was on the editorial board of the American Political Science Review between 2001 and 2007.

She is committed to advancing interdisciplinary and cross-subfield work in political science that is both theoretically grounded and that has implications for the practice of politics. She will work to strengthen APSA efforts to build links between research and undergraduate education, and to support all teachers of political science.

VICE PRESIDENT NOMINEE, 2009–10

Atul Kohli, Princeton University

Atul Kohli is the David K.E. Bruce Professor of International Affairs and professor of politics and international affairs at Princeton University. His principal research interests are in the areas of comparative political economy with a focus on the developing countries. He is the author of State-Directed Development: Political Power and Industrialization in the Global Periphery (winner of the Charles Levine Award [2005] of the International Political Science Association), Democracy and Discontent: India's Growing Crisis of Governability, The State and Poverty in India, and the editor of six volumes: The State and Development in the Third World; India's Democracy; State Power and Social Forces; Community Conflicts and the State in India; The Success of India's Democracy, and S*tates, Markets and Just Growth.* He has also published some 50 articles. His current research focuses on the topic of imperialism and the developing world. He is the chief editor of World Politics. He has received grants and fellowships from the Social Science Research Council, Ford Foundation, and Russell Sage Foundation. He received his Ph.D. from the University of California, Berkeley.

TREASURER NOMINEE, 2009–11

Arthur Lupia, University of Michigan

Arthur Lupia is the Hal R. Varian Professor of Political Science at the University of Michigan and research professor at its Institute for Social Research. He studies how information and institutions affect policy and politics with a focus on how people make decisions when they lack information. He draws from multiple scientific and philosophical disciplines and he integrates many research methods. His work provides insights on voting, civic competence, legislative-bureaucratic relations, parliamentary governance, and political communication.

His articles have appeared a wide range of academic journals. His books include T*he Democratic Dilemma: Can Citizens Learn What They Need to Know?*, Stealing the Initiative: How State Government Reacts to Direct Democracy, Elements of Reason: Cognition, Choice, and the Bounds of Rationality, Posi-

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press

tive Changes in Political Science: The Legacy of Richard D. McKelvey's Most Influential Writings, and The Cambridge Handbook of Experimental Political Science (forthcoming).

He is active in developing new opportunities for social scientists. As a founder of TESS (Time-shared Experiments for the Social Sciences), he has helped hundreds of researchers run innovative experiments using nationally distributed subject pools. As an original and regular contributor to NSF's EITM (Empirical Implications of Theoretical Models) program, he has helped to develop curricula that show young scholars how to better integrate advanced empirical and theoretical methods into effective research agendas. As a principal investigator of the ANES (American National Election Studies), he has introduced many procedural, methodological, and content innovations to one of the world's best-known scientific studies of elections.

His awards include the 2007 Innovators Award from the American Association for Public Opinion Research and 1998 Award for Initiatives in Research from the National Academy of Sciences. He has been a Guggenheim Fellow and had a fellowship at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences. He is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

He served on the APSA Governing Council from 2006 to 2008. He has served APSA in numerous other capacities including being an APSR Editorial Board member and president of the Political Psychology section.

As APSA treasurer he will be diligent in a pursuit of procedural transparency and rigorous accountability. He will be persistent in ensuring that APSA's resources are used effectively to address the concerns of the membership today and protected to facilitate APSA's long-term success.

SECRETARY NOMINEE, 2009–10

Roxanne L. Euben, Wellesley College

Roxanne L. Euben is Mildred Lane Kemper Professor of Political Science and chair of the department of political science at Wellesley College. She holds a Ph.D. from Princeton University in politics and Near Eastern studies and a BA from Wesleyan University. Her research and teaching lie at the intersection of political theory, Middle Eastern politics, and the study of Islam.

Euben's scholarship is primarily in the emerging field of comparative political theory, with a specific focus on the relationship between Muslim and Euro-American political thought. She is the author of Enemy in the Mirror: Islamic Fundamentalism and the Limits of Modern Rationalism (Princeton University Press, 1999), Journeys to the Other Shore: Muslim and Western Travelers in Search of Knowledge (Princeton University Press, 2006), and co-editor/writer, with Muhammad Qasim Zaman, of Princeton Readings in Islamist Thought: Texts and Contexts from Al-Banna to Bin-Laden (Princeton University Press, forthcoming). Her scholarship has appeared in range of anthologies, newspapers, and academic journals, and include articles in Perspectives on Politics, The Journal of Politics, Political Theory, The Review of Politics, The International Studies Review, Common Knowledge, Current History, The (London) Times Higher Education Supplement, and Theory & Event. She has lectured extensively on topics such as jihad and political action, Muslim and Western cosmopolitanism, and the politics of travel and translation in European and Muslim traditions.

Euben teaches courses in political theory, feminist theory, and Muslim political thought, and was awarded the Pinanski Teaching Prize at Wellesley College (2003). Other awards include the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study Fellowship (2004–05), the American Council of Learned Societies Fellowship (2000–01), and the Best Paper Award from the French Politics Group of the American Political Science Association (2005).

She is currently serving on the editorial board of The American Political Science Review and is chair of the APSA's Leo Strauss Award Committee (2008–09). She has previously served on the Foundations of Political Theory First Book Award Committee (2007) and on the APSA's Foundations of Political Theory Council (2004–06).

As APSA Council secretary, Euben would bring a commitment to interdisciplinary approaches to the study of politics, to methodological pluralism in political inquiry, to internationalizing political science, and to addressing the particular challenges of balancing high-quality research and teaching at liberal arts colleges.

COUNCIL NOMINEE, 2009–11

Cristina Beltrán, Haverford College

Cristina Beltrán is an associate professor of political science at Haverford College. A political theorist, she holds a BA in politics from the University of California at Santa Cruz and a Ph.D. in political science from Rutgers University. Beltrán teaches courses on modern and contemporary political theory, Latino politics in the United States, democratic theory, feminist political theory, and American political thought. She was the 2008 Haverford College recipient of the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation Award for Outstanding Teaching.

Broadly cast, Beltrán's research interests center on questions of membership, identity, inequality, and the way in which these forces shape deliberation and participation in the public sphere. She is the author of Performing Unity: Latino Politics and the Pursuit of Visibility, forthcoming with Oxford University Press (2009). Her work has also appeared in scholarly journals such as Political Theory, Political Research Quarterly, and various edited volumes, and she currently serves on the editorial board for the journal Polity.

Beltrán has been a regular and active participant in ASPA meetings since 1999. She has served as president of the Women's Caucus of the Western Political Science Association (2009) and as a member of numerous APSA committees, including the APSA Task Force on Graduate Education in Political Science (2002–04), the APSA Committee on Teaching and Learning (2004–06), the Annual Meeting Review Committee (2005–07), the Alice Paul Award Committee of the APSA Women's Caucus (2005–06), and the Leo Strauss Award Committee for the best dissertation in the field of political philosophy (2008–09). She has been a longtime member of the Latino/a Caucus within APSA and has served on the APSA Committee on the Status of Latina/os in the Profession.

If elected to council, she would work to ensure that APSA continue its efforts to be responsive to its diverse membership, particularly those underrepresented in the profession. She would be a strong advocate for intellectual and academic pluralism and would seek to represent the concerns of faculty at small, teaching-intensive institutions as well as those who work at underfunded public universities.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press

COUNCIL NOMINEE, 2009–11

Mark Blasius, City University of New York

Mark Blasius is professor emeritus of political science at the Graduate Center and La Guardia Community College of the City University of New York, where he taught for over 25 years. Recently he was a visiting professor at the University of Amsterdam and the University of the Philippines. His Ph.D. is in political philosophy from Princeton University and his undergraduate degree is in psychology from New York University

Mark's research and teaching are in contemporary political thought and the politics of sexuality and gender. His work includes: Gay and Lesbian Politics: Sexuality and the Emergence of a New Ethic (Temple, 1994), We Are Everywhere: A Historical Sourcebook of Gay and Lesbian Politics (co-editor, Routledge, 1997), Sexual Identities, Queer Politics (editor, Princeton, 2001), and articles in such journals as Political Theory, APSR, Journal of the History of Sexuality, and GLQ: A Journal of Lesbian and Gay Studies. He is now completing Sexuality and Social Justice, (a monograph in comparative political theory to be published by Chicago) and More Bakla [gay] Than We Admit: Insights into Philippine Cultural Politics (an edited volume to be published in the Philippines).

He has served as a Fulbright senior specialist at the University of the Philippines, was a resident scholar at the Rockefeller Foundation's Bellagio Center, and was a visiting scholar at the Center for Feminist Research and Center for Multiethnic and Transnational Studies of the University of Southern California.

At CUNY Mark served as undergraduate department chairperson and as deputy executive officer for the Ph.D./MA program in political science as well as the latter's field chair for political theory.

In the APSA he was a founding member of the Gay and Lesbian Caucus and elected co-chair for its first three years. He was appointed to the APSA's Task Force on Gay and Lesbian Political Scientists and was subsequently appointed the first chair of the Committee on the Status of Lesbians, Gays, Bisexuals and the Transgendered in the Profession. Since then he has continued to promote greater inclusiveness in the profession with respect to sexuality, race, ethnicity, and gender.

He believes that the APSA should be responsive to the broad spectrum of constituencies involved in research, teaching, and advocacy about politics. His own experience also highlights the importance of recognizing the range of institutions that need to be served by the association, from community colleges to research universities to advocacy institutions. Recent debates over the locations of future APSA meetings have helped raise the profile of sexual diversity issues in our profession, and he is keen to build on that momentum to include sexuality in our collective attention to questions of diversity.

COUNCIL NOMINEE, 2009–11

Yun-han Chu, Chiang Ching-Kuo Foundation/Academia Sinica/National Taiwan University

Yun-han Chu is distinguished research fellow of the Institute of Political Science at Academia Sinica and professor of political science at National Taiwan University. He also serves concurrently as president of Chiang Ching-Kuo Foundation for International Scholarly Exchange. Professor Chu received his Ph. D. in political science from the University of Minnesota and joined the faculty of National Taiwan University in 1987. He was a visiting associate professor at Columbia University in 1990–91 and has been appointed as an adjunct visiting professor at Peking University since 2007. Professor Chu specializes in politics of Greater China, East Asian political economy, and democratization. He has served on the Planning Committee of the Comparative Study of Electoral Systems (CSES) from 2000 to 2009. He has served as the Coordinator of Asian Barometer Survey, a regional network of survey on democracy, governance, and development covering more than 16 Asian countries, since its founding in 2000. He currently serves on the editorial board of Journal of Democracy, Pacific Affairs, China Review, Journal of Contemporary China and Journal of East Asian Studies.

He is the author, co-author, editor, or co-editor of 13 books. Among his recent English publications are Consolidating Third-Wave Democracies (Johns Hopkins University Press, 1997), China Under Jiang Zemin (Lynne Reinner, 2000), The New Chinese Leadership: Challenges and Opportunities after the 16th Party Congress (Cambridge University Press, 2004), and How East Asians View Democracy (Columbia University Press, 2008). His works also appeared in World Politics, International Organization, Journal of Politics, China Quarterly, Journal of Democracy, Pacific Affairs, Asian Survey, etc. Professor Chu has served as president of Chinese Association of Political Science (Taipei) from 2002–04.

Over the years, he has built up an extensive academic network throughout East Asia and beyond. I am ready to help the APSA to deepen its ties with the burgeoning political science community across the Pacific.

COUNCIL NOMINEE, 2009–11

Mark A. Graber, University of Maryland

Mark A. Graber is a professor of law at the University of Maryland School of Law and a professor of government at the University of Maryland, College Park. The acknowledged global authority on where to find cheap food and gas on I-95 between Baltimore and Washington, Professor Graber is also the author of three books and numerous articles on constitutional law, history, theory, development, and politics.

He is honored to be nominated to the APSA Council, even if the nomination occurred 35 years too late to be included on his college applications. His main disciplinary interests are pedagogical. As a profession, we should be concerned with the increased roles of adjuncts in the political science classroom. Consider the diminishing number of undergraduates who find two tenured or tenure-track professors to write their letters of recommendation. If, as is the case at many universities, adjuncts routinely teach introduction to comparative politics and civil liberties for an economic pittance, then perhaps all universities and colleges should rely on adjuncts. He does not believe that as a profession we have confronted this issue or explained what tenured and tenure-track professors contribute to the classroom.

He is also concerned about the increasing narrowness of thinking in the discipline and the academy at large. Once upon a time,

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press

people like him were scholars. Then they became political scientists. Afterwards, they were progressively reduced to being members of the law and courts subfield, part of the constitutionalism wing of the law and courts subfield, historical institutionalists in the constitutionalism wing of the law and courts subfield, etc. As a white, married, Jewish male with three daughters ("children" would be too general), who is a historical institutionalist in the constitutional wing of the law and courts subfield, he is increasing expected to talk only with the other three members of the field who might meet that description. He would like to be a scholar again, an ambition he suspects animates many of us. To this end, he believes APSA should continue ongoing efforts to have us broaden our intellectual focus, provide increased opportunities for interactions between political scientists in different fields, and promote extensive contacts with scholars in other buildings whose work ought to be of interest.

COUNCIL NOMINEE, 2009–11

Evelyne Huber, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill

Evelyne Huber is Morehead Alumni Professor of Political Science and chair of the department of political science at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. She studied at the University of Zurich and received both her MA (1973) and Ph.D. (1977) from Yale University. Her interests are in comparative politics and political economy, with an area focus on Latin America and the Caribbean and Western Europe, particularly on comparisons between these regions. She is the author of The Politics of Workers' Participation: The Peruvian Approach in Comparative Perspective (1980); co-author of Democratic Socialism in Jamaica (with John D. Stephens, 1986); co-author of Capitalist Development and Democracy (with Dietrich Rueschemeyer and John D. Stephens, 1992); co-author of Development and Crisis of the Welfare State (with John D. Stephens, 2001); co-winner of the Outstanding Book Award 1991–92 from the American Sociological Association, Political Sociology Section; and winner of the Best Book Award 2001 from the American Political Science Association, Political Economy Section. She has also contributed articles to, among others, World Politics, Latin American Research Review, Comparative Politics, Politics and Society, Comparative Political Studies, The Journal of Politics, Studies in Comparative International Development, Comparative Social Research, Political Power and Social Theory, American Journal of Sociology, American Sociological Review, and Economic Perspectives. She received the Distinguished Teaching Award for Post-Baccalaureate Instruction from the University of North Carolina in 2004. She has been a fellow at the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton; the Hanse-Wissenschaftskolleg in Delmenhorst, Germany; the Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study in the Social Sciences in Uppsala; the Kellogg Institute at the University of Notre Dame; and the Woodrow Wilson Center for International Scholars at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.

She is strongly committed to advancing political science through research, teaching, and work in professional organizations. She has served APSA in various capacities, such as president of the Comparative Politics Section 2001-–03, member of the Nominating Committee 2001-–02, member of the Taskforce on Difference and Inequality in the Third World 2004–06, and member of three different award committees. She also strongly believes that political science along with the social sciences more broadly and the professional associations promoting them benefit from engaging with each other and from doing so across national borders. She hopes to bring her experience from working with the Latin American Studies Association and the Social Science Research Council to bear on the deliberations in the APSA Council.

COUNCIL NOMINEE, 2009–11

Thomas E. Mann, Brookings Institution

Thomas E. Mann is the W. Averell Harriman Chair and senior fellow in Governance Studies at The Brookings Institution. Between 1987 and 1999, he was director of Governmental Studies at Brookings. Before that, Mann was executive director of the American Political Science Association.

Born on September 10, 1944, in Milwaukee, he earned his BA in political science at the University of Florida and his MA and Ph.D. at the University of Michigan. He first came to Washington in 1969 as a Congressional Fellow in the offices of senator Philip A. Hart and representative James G. O'Hara.

Mann has taught at Princeton University, Johns Hopkins University, Georgetown University, the University of Virginia, and American University; conducted polls for congressional candidates; worked as a consultant to IBM and the Public Broadcasting Service; chaired the Board of Overseers of the National Election Studies; and served as an expert witness in the constitutional defense of the McCain-Feingold campaign finance law. He lectures frequently in the United States and abroad on American politics and public policy and is also a regular contributor to newspaper stories and television and radio programs on politics and governance.

Mann is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. He is a recipient of the American Political Science Association's Frank J. Goodnow and Charles E. Merriam Awards.

Mann's published works include Unsafe at Any Margin: Interpreting Congressional Elections; Vital Statistics on Congress, The New Congress, A Question of Balance: The President, the Congress and Foreign Policy; Media Polls in American Politics; Renewing Congress; Congress, the Press, and the Public, Intensive Care: How Congress Shapes Health Policy, Campaign Finance Reform: A Sourcebook, The Permanent Campaign and Its Future, Inside the Campaign Finance Battle: Court Testimony on the New Reforms, The New Campaign Finance Sourcebook, and Party Lines: Competition, Partisanship and Congressional Redistricting. He has also written numerous scholarly articles and opinion pieces on various aspects of American politics, including elections, political parties, Congress, the presidency, and public policymaking.

He is currently working on projects dealing with redistricting, election administration, campaign finance, and congressional performance. He and Norman Ornstein recently published an updated edition of The Broken Branch: How Congress is Failing America and How to Get It Back on Track (Oxford University Press, 2008).

COUNCIL NOMINEE, 2009–11

Joseph P. McCormick, II, Pennsylvania State University, York

Joseph P. McCormick, II, is an associate professor of political science and director of Academic Affairs at the York Campus of The Pennsylvania State University. He received a Ph.D., MA, and BA from the University of Pittsburgh. While his graduate training was in American politics, with an emphasis on urban politics and public policy, his research and the bulk of his scholarship have been concerned with African American political behavior, e.g., the 1984 Jesse Jackson presidential campaign, the politics of deracialization in the late 1980s, and the Million Man March and the politics of racial consciousness in the late 1990s. His work has also been concerned with the scholarship of race and political science. He is past president of the National Conference of Black Political Scientists, past co-chair of the Race, Ethnicity and Politics organized section of APSA, and he has served as a consultant for the Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press

His experience at Howard University as the director of the Masters of Arts in Public Administration Program from 1989 to 2002 and as a committee member and chair of a number of doctoral dissertation committees, sensitized him to the importance of mentoring graduate students who sought to pursue careers in the academy. In these roles he provided his students with constructive criticism and the sort of professional guidance and direction that he feels that he missed as a graduate student.

He currently places the professional development of younger/junior-level scholars, from a variety of disciplines, at the top of his agenda as a full time administrator. While an integral part of his day-to-day responsibilities as the campus administrative officer at Penn State York, he nonetheless maintains professional relationships with a range of political scientists beyond the boundaries of his campus. He has had the good fortune to experience professional life from a variety of institutional perspectives and from both the faculty and administrative side of the academy. He is eager to share these experiences with the next generation political scientists. As a member of the APSA Council, he sees his particular niche as being a part of a sub-set of those in the profession who are concerned with mentoring the next generation of scholars and the next generation of leaders of the American Political Science Association.

COUNCIL NOMINEE, 2009–11

S. Laurel Weldon, Purdue University

Professor Weldon is the author of Protest, Representation and the Advocacy State (University of Michigan, forthcoming) and Protest, Policy and the Problem of Violence Against Women (University of Pittsburgh, 2002), as well as numerous articles and book chapters. Taking a global perspective on national and international politics, Weldon's work on political mobilization and policy impact explores many themes central to democratic and feminist theory including questions of representation, intersectionality, solidarity, multiculturalism, and state-civil society relations, among others. Weldon's work combines quantitative cross-national analysis with comparative case studies and fieldwork. With Mala Htun of the New School, Weldon is currently involved in an NSF-funded project investigating women's rights in 70 countries. She has been the recipient of both teaching and research awards.

Professor Weldon has served on the Committee on the Status of Women in the Profession and has also served as newsletter editor, programme-chair, and president-elect of the Women and Politics research section of APSA. She has also served on and chaired the Best Dissertation Proposal Award for the Women's Caucus of APSA. She has also served on the council of the Midwest Political Science Association and has chaired and participated in other MPSA award committees. Professor Weldon's full CV is available on her Web site at: web.ics.purdue.edu/~weldons/.

Continuing Officers and Council

PRESIDENT, 2009–10

Henry E. Brady, University of California, Berkeley

Henry E. Brady is Class of 1941 Monroe Deutsch Professor of Political Science and Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley, with appointments in the department of political science and the Goldman School of Public Policy. He is also faculty director of Berkeley's Survey Research Center and the University of California Data Archive and Technical Assistance (UC DATA) program. Prior to coming to Berkeley he taught at Boston University, Harvard University, and the University of Chicago. He has a Ph.D. in economics and political science from MIT (1980) and undergraduate degrees in mathematics and physics from Harvey Mudd College (1969).

Brady's scholarly work includes publications on political methodology, political behavior, and public policy. His work examines the interaction between the mass public and elites in both democratic and transitional societies. He has undertaken surveys in Canada, Estonia, Russia, and the United States, and he has run large-scale field experiments on social welfare in California. He has published on American, Canadian, Estonian, and Russian public opinion, elections, and political participation, and on public policy topics including voting systems and social welfare policy.

He is the author or co-author of over 60 professional articles. His books include Letting the People Decide (with Richard Johnston, Andre Blais, and Jean Crete, 1992) on the Canadian election of 1988 (winner of the Canadian government's Harold Adams Innis Award for best book in the social sciences), Voice and Equality (with Sidney Verba and Kay Schlozman, 1995) on political participation in America (winner of the Converse Award), Expensive Children in Poor Families: The Intersection of Childhood Disability and Welfare (with Marcia Meyers and Eva Seto, 2000), Rethinking Social Inquiry (co-edited with David Collier, 2004) about the use of both qualitative and quantitative methods (winner of the Sartori Award), Capturing Campaign Effects (co-edited with Richard Johnston, 2006), and the Oxford Handbook of Political Methodology (co-edited with Janet Box-Steffensmeier and David Collier, 2008). He is now completing (with Cynthia Kaplan) Gathering Voices: Political Mobilization and the Collapse of the Soviet Union.

In 2004 Brady was elected a member

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press

of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and in 2006 he was elected a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. His service to the profession includes membership on the Board of the American National Election Studies, the National Science Foundation's Advisory Committee on Social, Behavioral, and Economic Sciences and Advisory Committee on Cyberinfrastructure. He has also worked with others to create the EITM (Empirical Implications of Theoretical Models) summer program. Brady's contributions to APSA include service as vice president, as treasurer, as a member of the council, as co-chair (with Margaret Weir) of the 2003 Program Committee, and as organizer of panels for the Political Methodology section and the Public Opinion and Voting section. He is past president and a founding member of the Political Methodology Society.

COUNCIL, 2008–10

Jonathan Benjamin-Alvarado, University of Nebraska at Omaha

Dr. Jonathan Benjamin-Alvarado is an associate professor of political science at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, and assistant director for Research and Outreach of the Office of Latino/Latin American Initiatives of the Great Plains. He is also a senior research associate with the University of Georgia's Center for International Trade and Security specializing on Latin American economic development and nonproliferation affairs.

He has conducted research related to Cuba's efforts to develop a nuclear energy capability and broader energy development issues and is recognized as one of the United States' leading specialists in this issue area. He has published numerous articles, monographs, and commentaries on this subject in Spanish, Russian, German, and English in newspapers and scholarly and policy journals. His book Power to the People: Energy and the Cuban Nuclear Program (2000) was published by Routledge, Inc. He is presently coordinating a research project with the Brookings Institution on the geo-strategic and U.S. national security implications of Cuban energy development policy.

Dr. Benjamin-Alvarado has received the University of Nebraska Alumni Excellence in Teaching Award and the Outstanding Teaching in Political Science Award from Pi Sigma Alpha, the national political science honor society. He is past president of the Latino Caucus of the American Political Science Association and has served on the APSA's Minority Programs Review Implementation Committee. He has received numerous grants including: grants from the U.S. Department of Education, John Beverly and Elena Diaz-Verson Amos Foundation, The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, The Ford Foundation, and The Johns Hopkins University Cuba Exchange Program (partial list).

COUNCIL, 2008–10

Jodi Dean, Hobart and William Smith Colleges

Jodi Dean is a professor of political science at Hobart and William Smith Colleges. She is a powerful spokesperson for methodological pluralism, for regular competitive elections in APSA, and for the interests of the many outstanding political scientists teaching at non-Ph.D.-granting institutions.

Dean's main teaching interests are political theory, women's studies, and digital media and politics. She has published over 50 articles and book chapters and authored the following five books: Democracy and Other Neoliberal Fantasies: Communicative Capitalism and Left Politics (Duke, forthcoming), Žižek's Politics (Routledge, 2006), Publicity's Secret: How Technoculture Capitalizes on Democracy (Cornell, 2002), Aliens in America: Conspiracy Cultures from Outerspace to Cyberspace (Cornell, 1998), and Solidarity of Strangers: Feminism After Identity Politics (University of California, 1996).

Dean has an exceptional record of administrative service. In APSA she has served on the Committee on the Status of Lesbians and Gays in the Profession and as annual meeting program chair for Division 2, Foundations of Political Theory. She is also the co-editor of the journal Theory and Event and a member of the executive committee of the Association for the Study of Law, Culture, and the Humanities. At Hobart and William Smith she has chaired the department of political science and the Committee on the Faculty.

Jodi Dean's scholarship embodies the values that inspire the Perestroika movement and she has all the qualifications to make a distinguished contribution to the APSA Council.

COUNCIL, 2008–10

Kathleen Hall Jamieson, University of Pennsylvania

Kathleen Hall Jamieson is the Elizabeth Ware Packard Professor of Communication at the Annenberg School for Communication of the University of Pennsylvania, the founding director of Penn's Annenberg Public Policy Center and Program Director of the Annenberg Foundation Trust at Sunnylands. Jamieson earned her Ph.D. in communication at the University of Wisconsin–Madison and has taught at the University of Maryland; the University of Texas, Austin; and the University of Pennsylvania, where she served as dean of the Annenberg School from 1989–2003. Jamieson received teaching awards at each of these universities.

Books authored by Jamieson include Packaging the Presidency (Oxford, 1984, 1992, 1996; winner of SCA Golden Anniversary Book Award), Eloquence in an Electronic Age (Oxford 1988 and 1990; recipient of the SCA Winans-Wichelns Book Award), Dirty Politics (Oxford, 1992 ), and Beyond the Double Bind: Women and Leadership (Oxford, 1995). With Joseph Cappella she wrote Spiral of Cynicism: The Press and the Public Good (Oxford, 1997; winner of APSA Political Communication Division Doris Graber Award) and Echo Chamber: Rush Limbaugh and the Conservative Media Establishment (Oxford, 2008). She and Karlyn Kohrs Campbell coauthored Presidents Creating the Presidency: Deeds Done in Words (University of Chicago Press, 2008). Paul Waldman and Jamieson's The Press Effect (Oxford) appeared in 2003. With Richard Johnston and Michael Hagen, Jamieson wrote The 2000 Election and the Foundations of Party Politics (Cambridge University Press, 2004).

Richard Johnston and Jamieson founded the Annenberg Pubic Policy Center's National Annenberg Election Study and she and journalist Brooks Jackson created FactCheck.org. Jamieson's videos for high school students on the Constitution earned the American Bar Association's Greeley Award.

Jamieson's work has been funded by the

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press

National Endowment for the Humanities, the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the MacArthur Foundation, the Ford Foundation, the Carnegie Corporation of New York, and the Pew Charitable Trusts, among others. She currently serves on the boards of the Russell Sage and WT Grant Foundations.

Awards won by Jamieson include the APSA political communication division's Murray Edelman Award. She is a fellow of the American Philosophical Society, the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and the International Communication Association.

COUNCIL, 2008–10

Rose McDermott, Brown University

Rose McDermott is professor of political Science at Brown University. A 2008–09 fellow at the Center for Advanced Studies in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford University, McDermott received her Ph.D. (political science) and MA (experimental social psychology) from Stanford. McDermott has taught at Cornell and UCSB and has held fellowships at Harvard's Olin Institute for Strategic Studies and Harvard's Women and Public Policy Program.

McDermott's research focuses on political psychology and international relations. Author of four books and over 70 articles on international relations, foreign policy, experimentation, the impact of emotion on decision making, social identity, and both evolutionary and neuroscientific models of political science, McDermott is best known for Risk Taking in International Relations: Prospect Theory in American Foreign Policy (Michigan, 1998), Political Psychology in International Relations (Michigan, 2004), and Presidential Illness, Leadership and Decision Making (Cambridge, 2007). Her latest co-edited volume is the forthcoming Measuring Identity: A Guide for Social Science Research, with Rawi Abdelal, Yoshiko Herrera, and Alastair Iain Johnson (Cambridge).

McDermott is currently involved in a series of projects investigating the biological and genetic bases of aggression, and a book project on pandemic disease.

McDermott has been active in the American Political Science Association since 1997, serving as program chair for Political Psychology, and member-at-large for the qualitative and multi-methods section. She currently serves on APSA's publications committee. McDermott is also active in ISA (where she serves on the Workshop Grants Committee) and the International Society of Political Psychology, where she was elected to the Governing Council, the vice presidency (2006-–09), and the editorial board for the journal Political Psychology.

COUNCIL, 2008–10

Maria Victoria Murillo, Columbia University

Maria Victoria Murillo is associate professor of political science and international affairs at Columbia University since 2003. She received her BA from the University of Buenos Aires and her Ph.D. from Harvard University. Before joining Columbia, she had been a faculty member at Yale University, a fellow at the Harvard Academy for International and Area Studies, and a Peggy Rockefeller Fellow at the David Rockefeller Center for Latin American Studies at Harvard University.

She has studied how political coalitions shape labor politics, economic policymaking, and public-utility reform in Latin America. She is the author of Labor Unions, Partisan Coalitions, and Market Reforms in Latin America (Cambridge University Press, 2001) and co-editor of Argentine Democracy: the Politics of Institutional Weakness (Pennsylvania State University Press, 2005) as well as numerous articles in U.S. and Latin American social science journals. Her current work includes a manuscript entitled P*olitical Competition, Partisanship, and Policymaking in the Reform of Latin American Public Utilities* to be published by Cambridge University Press and a collaborative research project on distributive politics through clientelistic and patronage networks in new democracies, which has been funded by the National Science Foundation. A 2004 article publishing results from this collaborative project won the Luebbert Award for the best article from the Comparative Politics Section of APSA.

COUNCIL, 2008–10

Mark A. Peterson, University of California, Los Angeles

Mark A. Peterson is professor of public policy and political science at the UCLA School of Public Affairs, and former chair of the school's department of public policy. Previously he held faculty appointments in public affairs, political science, and public health at the University of Pittsburgh and in government at Harvard University. He received his BA, MA, and Ph.D. in political science from the University of Michigan, specializing in American government.

His scholarship focuses on interactions among the presidency, Congress, and interest groups, evaluating their implications for policy making, both within the general domain of domestic policy and with special attention to national health care policy and Medicare reform. He has written extensively on how Congress responds to presidential legislative initiatives, including Legislative Together: The White House and Capital Hill from Eisenhower to Reagan (Harvard), which in its earlier dissertation incarnation won the American Political Science Association's E. E. Schattschneider Award and the Pi Sigma Alpha Award from the Midwest Political Science Association. Peterson has also investigated the ways in which presidents use relationships with organized interests to promote their administration's political or programmatic agendas, including an article published in the American Political Science Review. As a participant in the Annenberg Institutions of American Democracy Project, he co-chaired the Commission on the Executive Branch and co-edited the volume it produced on the politics and performance of the presidency and bureaucracy, Institutions of American Democracy: The Executive Branch (Oxford), which won the Richard E. Neustadt Award from the Presidential Research section of the APSA. He was also a co-author of the Annenberg's project book exploring public and elite opinion on the performance of American institutions, Institutions of American Democracy: A Republic Divided (Oxford). In addition, Peterson has contributed widely to scholarship on health politics and policy, including editing Health Markets? The New Competition in Medical Care and co-editing Uncertain Times: Kenneth Arrow and the Changing Economics of Health Care, both published by Duke; and for nine years serving as the editor of the Journal of Health Politics, Policy, and Law, including orchestrating book-length special issues on the managed-care backlash and who shall lead. He received an Investigator Award in Health Policy Research from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and was elected to membership in the National Academy of Social Insurance.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press

As an APSA Congressional Fellow, he served as a legislative assistant for health policy for senator Tom Daschle (D-SD). He was on the Study Panel on Medicare and Markets organized by the National Academy of Social Insurance and currently chairs the National Advisory Committee for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation's Scholars in Health Policy Research program. He is a member of the National Advisory Committees for the Foundation's Changes in Health Care Financing and Organization (HCFO) program, Investigator Awards in Health Policy Research Program, and Center for Health for Health Policy. He has also served on advisory panels for the California HealthCare Foundation.

At APSA, he was on the editorial board of PS: Political Science & Politics and served on the selection committee for the Hubert H. Humphrey Award recognizing notable public service by a political scientist. He chaired the Aaron Wildavsky Enduring Contribution Award Committee for the Public Policy Section, and was a member of its Editor Selection Committee for Policy Studies Journal. He is a founding member of and chaired the first nominating committee for the new Organized Section on Health Politics and Policy.

COUNCIL, 2008–10

Sherri L. Wallace, University of Louisville

Dr. Sherri L. Wallace is associate professor in the department of political science at the University of Louisville and executive director of the National Conference of Black Political Scientists (NCOBPS). She is a native of North Little Rock, Arkansas, where she earned her bachelor of arts degree in political science from the University of Arkansas at Little Rock. Encouraged to apply for the American Political Science Association's (APSA) annual Ralph Bunch Institute for Black Scholars, she became one of 25 national undergraduate recipients in the summer of 1988 to research issues on African American politics at the Louisiana State University and Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. It was there that she discovered her love for academia and research questions dealing with African Americans and community economic development issues.

Also in 1989, she received recognition as an American Political Science Association Minority Graduate Fellow. In 1993, she received the competitive President's Council for Cornell Women Fellowship to conduct her dissertation research, "Minority Participation in the Philadelphia Enterprise Zone Program," under her dissertation chair, Dr. Theodore J. Lowi, the renowned J.L. Senior Professor of American Institutions. She graduated in 1995 from Cornell University in Ithaca, New York, with both her master of arts and Ph.D. in government.

Research fields: African American politics, urban politics, public policy, community economic development, faith-based organizations, and college-textbook diversity. She has published book chapters in edited volumes, book reviews, and refereed articles in a variety of scholarly journals.

Teaching fields: American politics (African American politics, state politics, urban politics) and public policy. Recognized as a "Faculty Favorite" (2006), she teaches courses in American government, black social and political thought, politics of the black community, public policy, state government, urban politics, and other related topics.

Public service: In addition to actively serving the University of Louisville on departmental and college-wide committees as well as an advisor to the Thurgood Marshall Pre-Law Society, NAACP at UofL and College Democrats, her professional service includes serving as a member/co-chair of the APSA Standing Committee on the Status of Blacks in the Profession. She served as Program Chair of the 2008 APSA Teaching and Learning Conference Program Committee. Currently, she serves on the APSA Task Force on Political Science in the 21st Century, an initiative of former NCOBPS and APSA president Dianne M. Pinderhughes, the first African American woman to serve in APSA's 104-year history. In addition she has served on the program committee and section chair for Western Political Science Association, as section chair for Midwest Political Science Association, and on the Executive Council and other committees of NCOBPS.

She stays active in the community as a professional consultant on various projects, and as a member and volunteer on local boards, committees, and organizations.

COUNCIL, 2008–10

Franke Wilmer, Montana State University, Bozeman

Franke Wilmer received a Ph.D. from the University of Maryland in 1990 and is currently a full professor at Montana State University where she served four years as the political science department head. She has published two books and is currently writing a text on international human rights. The Indigenous Voice in World Politics (Sage, 1993) examines the international activism of indigenous peoples within the theoretical framework of a normatively grounded emerging world society and world system. It argues that the marginalization and moral exclusion of indigenous peoples is rationalized by an ideology of "progress" produced and reproduced within master narratives of modernity in settler and post-colonial states.

The Social Construction of Man, the State, and War: Identity, Conflict, and Violence in Former Yugoslavia (Routledge, 2002) elaborates the thesis that political dehumanization is rooted in exclusionary moral communities using psychoanalytic theory applied to the case of the 1990s Yugoslav wars. Franke has also published articles and book chapters on identity, conflict, feminism, and political theory. She has received numerous teaching and research awards as well as the 1998 APSA Pi Sigma Alpha teaching award, and has served as co-chair and co-program chair for the Race, Ethnicity, and Politics section of APSA.

Franke was appointed by Governor Schweitzer to chair the Montana Human Rights Commission in 2005. She was elected to the Montana State Legislature in 2006 and re-elected in 2008 to a second term in district, HD 64, Bozeman. Also in 2008, she was elected speaker of the house pro tem. She serves on the Education Committee, the State Administration and Veteran's Affairs Committee, the Governor's Capital Financial Advisory Council, and chairs the Interim Committee on State Administration and Veteran's Affairs. ■

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096509210948 Published online by Cambridge University Press