COVER
Interior view of the Bardill Studio, Schrans, Switzerland, designed by Valerio Olgiati. From 'Valerio Olgiati's architecture of the Future Anterior' by Rio Jia.
See pp.150–160.

leader 103 Architectures that will have been

design 104 Model in Vitrine: Housing Bruno Gironcoli's Oeuvre Hermann Eisenköck designed a museum to honour the work of idiosyncratic Austrian artist Bruno Gironcoli. Andreas Luescher examines its physical, imaginative, and visual boundaries.

118 PrinTimber: speculations on the technical evolution of housing Randall Teal, Carolina Manrique, Dwaine Carver and Damon Woods discuss the challenges of developing 3D printing using wood waste.

criticism 130 Platforms: Standing between sky and soil Antonios Thodis and David Leatherbarrow review Modern and Ancient (Greek) buildings and texts to account for the meanings of the platform: one of architecture's essential forms.

150 Valerio Olgiati's architecture of the Future Anterior: An encounter with the Bardill Studio Ruo Jia revisits Valerio Olgiati's Bardill Studio, starting with visible contradictions and moving to invisible sensations.

theory 161 Parallax as distortion within city space Louis D'Arcy Reed addresses the so-called parallax gap, identified by philosopher Slavoj Žižek, encouraging us to appreciate spatial dislocations and disorientations psychoanalytically.

education 170 From fidelity to pedagogy: The mathematics of Anne Tyng's oeuvre Bader Albader relates Anne Tyng's pioneering work in morphology to her design pedagogy, based on this mathematician-architect's idiosyncratic epistemology.

history 182 Contingencies over causes: How Foucault's archaeological method can help de-inevitablise the failure of the British post-war social housing estate Using the Southgate Estate in London as an example, Charlie Cullen tests Foucault's archaeological method to challenge dominant narratives about the British post-war social housing estate as an inevitable failure.

practice 198 Architects as knowledge brokers? Understanding the role of research investment in contemporary practice and its relationship to academic research Rebecca McLaughlan, Kieran Richards and Chris Smith explore how architectural practices are increasingly employing in-house research staff, shifting from design research to research generation.

insight 206 Problematic vision: Using problem creation to shape research Randall Teal speculates about interdisciplinarity.

210 Oceanic urbanism, or reimagining the contemporary cruise ship Craig Johnson imagines the cruise ship as a urban form.

review 217 Building Institution: The Institute for Architecture and Urban Studies Reviewed by Alex Maymind
