Xabier Etxeberria Adrien, musicologist and composer, is a lecturer at Musikene, Basque Country. Since 2010 he has coordinated the Tunukunata Takikunata Charinchik ethnomusicology project in Sicalpa, Ecuador. His publications include "Azuke eta Aita Donostiaren kantutegien berrikuspenaren alde" (Musiker 2010) and "La música de los kichwas de Sicalpa: etnomusicología e identidad" (in Identidad y Patrimonio de los Pueblos de América Andina, 2014).

Barbara Alge is a junior professor in ethnomusicology at the Hochschule für Musik und Theater in Rostock. She is author of the book Die Performance des Mouro in Nordportugal (2010), co-editor of Beyond Borders: Welt-Musik-Pädagogik (2013), and guest editor of "Transatlantic Musical Flows in the Lusophone World" (The World of Music (new series) 2/2, 2013).

Raymond Ammann received his PhD from the University of Bern and completed his habilitation at the University of Innsbruck. He conducts research on Alaska and Siberia, Melanesia (New Caledonia, Vanuatu, and Papua New Guinea), and, more recently, Swiss folk music. He has published several books, films, and CDs and a large number of articles and reviews.

Zoe Cormack is a research associate in history at the Open University. Her PhD thesis, recently submitted at Durham University, is a study of historical memory and landscape in a Dinka community in South Sudan.

Andrew J. Eisenberg received his PhD in ethnomusicology from Columbia University in 2009, and is currently visiting assistant professor of music at NYU Abu Dhabi. His research concerns music, aural culture, and social relations in urban Kenya.

Charlotte D'Evelyn received her PhD from the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa in 2013 and is currently serving on the faculty at Loyola Marymount University and California Institute for the Arts. Her ongoing research on music in Inner Mongolia, China explores issues of minority politics, ecology and heritage, masculinity, and transnational relationships with Mongolia and Tuva.

Kelly Natasha Foreman received her PhD in ethnomusicology/musicology from Kent State University in 2002, and is a lecturer in ethnomusicology at Wayne State University. She is working on a project entitled Hearing AfroFuturism; past publications include The Gei of Geisha; Music, Identity, and Meaning (2008), and chapters in Manners and Mischief (2011) and Bad Girls of Japan (2005).

Karim Gillani received his PhD in music and religious studies from the University of Alberta in 2012; his research examines the role of musical sound and recitation in Muslim contexts in South Asia and North America. He recently released his second album, Raah-e-Ishq: The Path of Love: Enchanting Tunes of Sufi Music.

Helen Hahmann is a PhD student at the University of Halle-Wittenberg, where she also teaches. Her dissertation is about the social practices of yodelling and yodelling competitions in Germany's Harz Mountains; her master's thesis was on the wakrapuku instrument in the Peruvian Andes. She also runs TINYA, an ethnomusiological radio program and blog (tinya.org).

Richie Neil Hao is assistant professor of communication studies at the University of Denver. His research interests are in the areas of intercultural, pedagogical, and performance studies. He has recently published articles in Text and Performance Quarterly, Cultural Studies⇔Critical Methodologies, and Qualitative Communication Research.

Catherine Ingram is a Newton International Fellow at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London, and an honourary research fellow at the University of Melbourne, Australia. She has conducted extensive musical ethnographic fieldwork in rural Kam (in Chinese, Dong 侗) minority communities in southwestern China, and has published on many aspects of Kam minority music. Her recent co-authored/co-edited publications include Environmental Preservation and Cultural Heritage in China (Commonground, 2013) and Taking Part in Music: Case Studies in Ethnomusicology (Aberdeen University Press, 2013). She is currently researching language-music relationships in Kam singing traditions.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.46.2014.bm Published online by Cambridge University Press

Songül Karahasanoğlu is a professor at the Turkish Music State Conservatory of Istanbul Technical University. She conducts her research and publishes in the areas of Turkish popular music, Islam and music, Turkish traditional music, and Turkish folk instruments. An accomplished player of mey (double-reed instrument), she also gives performances frequently.

Andrew Killick is a senior lecturer in ethnomusicology at the University of Sheffield. His publications on Korean music include In Search of Korean Traditional Opera: Discourses of Ch'anggŭk (University of Hawai'i Press, 2010) and Hwang Byungki: Traditional Music and the Contemporary Composer in the Republic of Korea (Ashgate, 2013).

Judith Klassen is a violist, ethnomusicologist, and curator of Canadian Music at the Canadian Museum of History in Gatineau, QC. She completed her PhD at Memorial University of Newfoundland in 2008, where her doctoral research explored faithful defiance in the song practices of Mennonites in northern Mexico.

Sunhee Koo is a lecturer in ethnomusicology in the Department of Anthropology at the University of Auckland, New Zealand. Her primary area of research is northeast Asia, including the music of China, North Korea, and South Korea. In her research, she explores the relationship between music, migration, identity, agency, and state power. Currently she is working on her book manuscript featuring the music, migration, and identity of Chinese Koreans in the PRC and South Korea, which will be published by the University of Hawai'i Press.

Joseph S.C. Lam is director of the Confucius Institute at the University of Michigan and professor of musicology in the School of Music, Theatre, and Dance at the University of Michigan. A musicologist and sinologist, Lam's recent publications include "Music and Masculinities in Ming China" (Asian Music, 2011), Songdai yinyueshi lunwenji: lilun yu miaoshu/Historical Studies on Song Dynasty Music: Theories and Narratives (Shanghai yinyue xueyuan chubanshe, 2012), and "Impulsive Scholars and Sentimental Heroes" in Gender in Chinese Music (Rochester University Press, 2013). Currently, he is working on a monograph entitled Kunqu, the Classical Opera of Globalized China.

Noel Lobley is an ethnomusicologist research associate at the Pitt Rivers Museum, University of Oxford, where he is developing the music and sound collections through a series of curated sound events. His research in the anthropology of sound and music explores relationships between archival field recordings and contemporary culture and environment.

Steven Loza is a professor of ethnomusicology at UCLA and the former director of the Arts of the Americas Institute, University of New Mexico. He is the author of Barrio Rhythm: Mexican American Music in Los Angeles (1993) and Tito Puente and the Making of Latin Music (1999), and has recorded two CDs of jazz and Latin jazz.

Morgan Luker is an assistant professor of music at Reed College. His research focuses on music and cultural policy in Buenos Aires, Argentina. His written work has appeared in Ethnomusicology Forum, Latin American Music Review, and elsewhere, and has been presented at conferences throughout the US, Latin America, and Europe.

Marion MacLeod is a Fulbright- and SSHRC-sponsored postdoctoral scholar at the University of Chicago. She received her PhD in ethnomusicology from Memorial

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.46.2014.bm Published online by Cambridge University Press

University of Newfoundland, studying alcohol's role in Acadian and Cajun musical practice, and has several recording credits with Smithsonian Folkways as an accompanist in Cape Breton-style piano.

Peter Manuel has researched and published extensively on musics of India, the Caribbean, Spain, and elsewhere. He teaches ethnomusicology at John Jay College and the Graduate Center of the City University of New York. A former sitarist, he now plays in a New Jersey bagpipe band.

Marin Marian-Bălaşa received his PhD in philosophy (musical aesthetics) from the University of Bucharest in 1994. He is a senior researcher at the "C. Brăiloiu" Institute of Ethnography and Folklore and editor of the international Journal of Ethnography and Folklore (Romanian Academy). His eleventh book focuses on the human subjectivities that founded ethnomusicology as an academic and political field.

Julio Mendívil is a Peruvian author, musician, and ethnomusicologist living in Germany. At present, Mendívil is the chair of the International Association for the Study of Popular Music, Latin American Branch, and director of the Center for World Music at the University of Hildesheim, Germany.

Fiorella Montero Diaz has just completed her PhD in ethnomusicology at Royal Holloway University of London with a study on "Fusion as Inclusion: A Lima Upper Class Delusion? An Exploration of Music Hybridity, Race, Class, the Elites and Social Conflict in Contemporary Lima-Peru." In 2008, she received her MA in Ethnomusicology from Goldsmiths University of London.

Robin Moore is a professor of ethnomusicology at the University of Texas at Austin. He is the author of various books on Cuban music, the latest (co-authored with Alejandro Madrid) being Danzón: Circum-Caribbean Dialogues in Music and Dance (Oxford, 2013). He currently edits the Latin American Music Review.

Anna Morcom is senior lecturer at Royal Holloway, University of London. Her publications include Unity and Discord: Music and Politics in Contemporary Tibet (Tibet Information Network, 2004) and Illicit Worlds of Indian Dance: Cultures of Exclusion (Hurst and Oxford University Press, 2013).

Sarah Morelli is associate professor of ethnomusicology at the University of Denver. A student of South Asian performing arts since 1992, her teachers have included Ali Akbar Khan (sarod, voice) and Chitresh Das (kathak). Her monograph, Tales of a Modern Guru: Pandit Chitresh Das and Indian Classical Dance in Diaspora, is forthcoming from the University of Illinois Press.

Inna Naroditskaya is professor of musicology at Northwestern University. Specializing in Azerbaijan, Russia, gender, empire, politics and music, she is the author of Song from the Land of Fire (Routledge, 2003), and Bewitching Russian Opera (Oxford University Press, 2012), and a co-editor of Music and the Sirens (Indiana University Press, 2006).

Barley Norton is a senior lecturer in ethnomusicology at Goldsmiths, University of London. His publications include a monograph Songs for the Spirits: Music and Mediums in Modern Vietnam (University of Illinois Press, 2009), a co-edited book Music and Protest in 1968 (Cambridge University Press, 2013), and a film Hanoi Eclipse: The Music of Dai Lam Linh (2010).

Thomas Nussbaumer has been employed since 1995 as an ethnomusicologist at the Innsbruck branch of the Music University Mozarteum Salzburg, and has, since 2011, chaired the ICTM's Austrian National Committee. He has conducted numerous field research trips and published extensively on alpine folk music, music and customs, and historical sources of traditional music.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.46.2014.bm Published online by Cambridge University Press

Rolando Antonio Pérez Fernández received his doctorate from the Higher Institute for the Arts in Havana, Cuba, in 1998 and is currently a professor at the National Music School of the National Autonomous University of Mexico. He is the author of two books and numerous articles on Caribbean and Mexican music.

Jennifer C. Post is an ethnomusicologist who has been engaged in research on Kazakh music in western Mongolia for the last ten years. Her research in the field includes work on music in India, North America, and Inner Asia, as well as general studies on ethnomusicology as a discipline. She has taught at Middlebury College, the New Zealand School of Music at Victoria University in Wellington, and the University of Arizona in Tucson, where she is currently lecturer at the School of Music.

Jacqueline Pugh-Kitingan (PhD, University of Queensland, 1982) is professor of ethnomusicology and also holds the Kadazandusun Chair at Universiti Malaysia Sabah. Her research interests include the musics of Sabah, East Malaysia (North Borneo), and Papua New Guinea; music, dance and ritual; and ethnographic mapping. Her many publications include Selected Papers on Music in Sabah (2004), "An Ethnomusicological Discussion of Bi Te, the Chanted Tales of the Huli" in Sung Tales of the Papua New Guinea Highlands (2011), Kadazan Dusun (2012), and "Gong Ensemble Music of the Dusun Tinagas of Sabah through the Gaze of Movement" in Yearbook for Traditional Music (2012).

Qi Kun is currently a professor of ethnomusicology in the Musicology Department of the China Conservatory of Music. She earned her BA in pipa performance from Anhui University in 1990, MA in ethnomusicology from the Musical Institute of the Chinese National Academy of Arts in 2001, and PhD in ethnomusicology from the Chinese University of Hong Kong in 2005. Her interests focus on Chinese folk music in historical, ritual, and social contexts, and her fieldwork has taken her to locations including Shanghai, Jiangsu, Zhejiang, Anhui, Jiangxi and Hunan.

Timothy Rice, professor of ethnomusicology at UCLA, writes on the traditional music of southeastern Europe, including May It Fill Your Soul: Experiencing Bulgarian Music (1994) and Music in Bulgaria: Experiencing Music, Expressing Culture (2004). He has also published articles and a book, Ethnomusicology: A Very Short Introduction (Oxford University Press, 2014), examining the general nature of research in ethnomusicology. He is a past president of the Society for Ethnomusicology; a co-founding editor of the Garland Encyclopedia of World Music (1998–2002); a former editor of Ethnomusicology; and the former director of the UCLA Herb Alpert School of Music.

Brenda M. Romero, associate professor of ethnomusicology at the University of Colorado, Boulder, holds a PhD in ethnomusicology from the University of California, Los Angeles, and BMus and MMus in music theory and composition from the University of New Mexico. She founded the Institute on the Pedagogies of World Music Theories in Boulder.

Ian Russell is the former director of the Elphinstone Institute at the University of Aberdeen (1999–2014). He researches the traditional culture of northeast Scotland and singing traditions in the English Pennines, especially Christmas carolling. He is the director of the Festival of Village Carols, and the president of the North Atlantic Fiddle Convention.

Amanda L. Scherbenske is an ethnomusicologist whose research interests span multiplicity and hybridity, the (de)construction of musical boundaries, music and race, and improvisation studies. She completed her MA and PhD from Wesleyan University. Her doctoral research investigated the politics of multiplicity and belonging among New York City-based improviser-composers.

Anthony Seeger is distinguished professor of ethnomusicology, emeritus, at UCLA and director emeritus of Smithsonian Folkways Recordings. He has published three books

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.46.2014.bm Published online by Cambridge University Press

and many articles on the Suyá (now called Kĩsêdjê) Indians of Brazil, including Why Suyá Sing: A Musical Anthropology of an Amazonian People (University of Illinois Press, 2004).

Daniel Sheehy is the director and curator of Smithsonian Folkways Recordings, the nonprofit, educational record label of the Smithsonian Institution. His publications include co-editing the South America, Mexico, Central America, and the Caribbean volume of the Garland Encyclopedia of World Music and Mariachi Music in America: Experiencing Music, Expressing Culture.

Shen Qia, an anthropological musicologist and a graduate of the Shanghai Conservatory of Music, holds professorial chairs at Henan (Kaifeng, Henan province) and Nanhua (Chiayi, Taiwan) universities. He is a doctoral supervisor at the China Conservatory of Music (Beijing) where he was also lecturer and then professor from 1981 to 2003. His many influential publications, particularly on musical morphology and musical ethnography, include "Yinqiang Theory" and "A Theory of Musical Beats" (Journal of the Central Conservatory of Music 1982 and 2014, respectively), and Cowrie Ballads: Archaic Songs on Jinuo Consanguineous Marriage and Related Jinuo Sociocultural Narratives (Shanghai Music Press, 2004).

Mark Slobin is the Winslow-Kaplan Professor of Music at Wesleyan University and the author or editor of many books on Afghanistan and Central Asia, eastern European Jewish music, film music, and ethnomusicology theory. He is currently researching the music history of his hometown, Detroit.

Gordon E. Smith is professor of ethnomusicology at Queen's University. Formerly director of the School of Music, he is currently vice-dean in the Faculty of Arts and Science. His publications include the co-edited volumes Marius Barbeau: Modelling Twentieth-Century Culture (2008) and Music Traditions, Cultures and Contexts (2010).

Amanda Villepastour is a lecturer at the School of Music, Cardiff University, specializing in African and Cuban music. She earned her PhD in ethnomusicology from the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London; her first monograph, Ancient Text Messages of the Yorùbá Bàtá Drum: Cracking the Code (Ashgate, 2010), is a linguistic study of drum language.

Po-wei Weng holds an MA in Musicology from National Taiwan University and is currently a PhD candidate in ethnomusicology at Wesleyan University. His dissertation project is titled "Music, Technology, and Mediated Modernity: Soundscape of Pili Puppetry in Taiwan." He has a number of publications on Chinese traditional and operatic music, ritual music, and music semiotics. He previously directed the Wesleyan Chinese ensemble and taught ethnomusicology courses at Wesleyan University, Mount Holyoke College, and Central Connecticut State University. His research interests include instrumental and theatrical music, East Asian popular culture in postcolonial and transnational contexts, music and technology, and music in film and television.

Trevor Wiggins is a research associate at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. He received his PhD from the University of Plymouth. He is currently co-editor of Ethnomusicology Forum and recently co-edited and contributed as an author to The Oxford Handbook of Children's Musical Cultures (Oxford University Press, 2013).

Susanne Ziegler, PhD, graduated in musicology (ethnomusicology) from the University of Cologne and has held positions at the Free University Berlin and in the Phonogramm-Archiv of the Ethnological Museum in Berlin. She is co-author of Music, Gender and Culture (1990) and the wax cylinder catalogue of the Berlin Phonogramm-Archiv (2006).

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.46.2014.bm Published online by Cambridge University Press