Contributors

Peter H. Argersinger is professor of history at Southern Illinois University and the immediate past president of SHGAPE. Among his publications on American political and rural history are Structure, Process, and Party (1992) and three books on Populism, including The Limits of Agrarian Radicalism (1995). He is also the coauthor of The American Journey (2009) and Twentieth-Century America: A Social and Political History (2005). He is currently finishing a book on the politics of apportionment during the 1890s. His essay is a revision of his presidential address to SHGAPE, delivered in March 2008.

Theresa Ann Case is an associate professor of history at the University of Houston–Downtown, where she teaches U.S. women's history and working-class history. She is currently finishing a book manuscript entitled, "The 'Great Southwest Strike' and Free Labor on the Southwestern Railways, 1865–1892," and writing an essay on ambivalent strikebreakers on the railways.

Ruth Crocker is professor of history and director of the Women's Studies Program at Auburn University. A former member of this journal's editorial board, she published Social Work and Social Order (1992), a study of race, class, and gender in the midwestern settlement movement, and Mrs. Russell Sage: Women's Activism and Philanthropy in the Gilded Age and Progressive Era (2006), which was reissued in paperback in fall 2008.

Edward P. Kohn is assistant professor of United States history and chair of American Studies at Bilkent University, Ankara, Turkey. Author of several articles on Theodore Roosevelt's New York political career, including one in this journal in January 2006, Dr. Kohn is finishing "Hot Time in the Old Town: Theodore Roosevelt, William Jennings Bryan, and New York's Killer Heat Wave of 1896," scheduled to be published by Basic Books in summer 2010.

Ann Marie Nicolosi is an associate professor at the College of New Jersey where she holds a joint appointment in the History Department and the women's and gender studies program. She was a student, friend, and colleague of Alan Dawley. Her current research interests focus on the ways in which women of the suffrage movement and the second-wave women's movement, and their opposition, used imagery and media to support their respective causes and agenda. She is working on her first book, "Beauty, Body, and Politics: Comparisons of the First and Second Waves."

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781400000955 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Troy Rondinone, an associate professor of history at Southern Connecticut State University, received his Ph.D. from UCLA. His areas of scholarly interest include working-class history, economic history, and radical studies. His first book, tentatively titled "The Great Industrial War: Framing Class Conflict in America, 1865–1950," is forthcoming from Rutgers University Press. He is currently working with Graham Cassano of Oakland University on an analysis of working-class republicanism.

Robert M. Senkewicz is professor of history at Santa Clara University. He has published a number of books on early California, most recently, Testimonios: Early California through the Eyes of Women, 1815–1848 (2006).

Kevin B. Sheets is an associate professor of history at the State University of New York, College at Cortland and project director for a Teaching American History grant. His 2005 article in the Journal of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era examined the early history of the Loeb Classical Library. His current research investigates Progressive Era pedagogical practices in both Latin and the arts.

Mark H. Stevens received his Ph.D. from the Claremont Graduate School and taught in the core curriculum at the University of Redlands School of Business for many years. An expert in Progressive Era and New Deal Los Angeles and California, about which he has written numerous articles, Dr. Stevens is currently preparing a biography of Meyer Lissner, whom he profiles in this issue.

Ian Tyrrell is Scientia Professor of History at the University of New South Wales, Australia and a member of the editorial board of this journal. He is interested in historiography as well as the history of social movements. His many writings on American historiography include Historians in Public: The Practice of American History, 1890-1970 (2005) and The Absent Marx: Class Analysis and Liberal History in Twentieth-Century America (1986). His most recent book is Transnational Nation: United States History in Global Perspective since 1789 (2007), and he is working on a new history of the American empire's moral reform networks, 1890-1930.

Christopher Waldrep, Pasker Professor of History at San Francisco State University, is the author of numerous books and articles, including The Many Faces of Judge Lynch: Extralegal Violence and Punishment in America (2002). He is currently at work on a book about civil rights and the Supreme Court.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781400000955 Published online by Cambridge University Press