Contributors

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.

LIMIN BAI is senior lecturer in the School of Asian and European Languages and Cultures, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. Her research interests focus on Chinese intellectual history between the 17th and the 19th centuries and Chinese education.

TIM H. BARRETT is professor of East Asian history at SOAS, University of London. His main interests lie in the history of religion in China, but also in constructions of China in the West, particularly Great Britain.

RICHARD BAUM teaches political science at UCLA. He is the author of Burying Mao: Chinese Politics in the Age of Deng Xiaoping.

JEAN-PHILIPPE BÉJA is a senior researcher at CNRS, and works at the Centre for International Research (CERI) in Paris. Trained as a sinologist and a political scientist, he works on the relation between the citizen and the state and on the emergence of civil society in the People's Republic of China. His latest book is a history of the pro-democracy movement in the People's Republic: A la recherche d'une ombre chinoise (2004).

ROBERT BENEWICK is research professor in politics at the University of Sussex and a Research Associate in the Centre for the Study of Democracy at the University of Westminster. His most recent publication is the State of China Atlas with Stephanie Donald, (2005).

FANG CAI is a professor and director of the Institute of Population and Labor Economics at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. He conducts research in the areas of demographic economics, population policy, migration and hukou policy, and studies of urban labour markets.

TIMOTHY CHEEK is professor and Louis Cha Chair of Chinese Research at the Institute of Asian Research, University of British Columbia, Vancouver. His research focuses on Chinese intellectuals and CCP history from the 1930s to the present.

FENG CHEN is professor in the department of government and international studies at Hong Kong Baptist University. His current research focuses on Chinese labour politics.

YUN-HAN CHU is Distinguished Research Fellow of the Institute of Political Science at Academia Sinica and Professor of Political Science at National Taiwan University. He serves concurrently as the president of Chiang Ching-kuo Foundation for International Scholarly Exchange. His most recent book is The New Chinese Leadership: Challenges and Opportunities after the 16th Party Congress (2004).

© The China Quarterly, 2006

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000130 Published online by Cambridge University Press

JACOB EDMOND is lecturer in modern and contemporary poetry in the Department of English at the University of Otago. He has published on aesthetic, social and political aspects of modern and contemporary poetry in Chinese, Russian and English. Recent articles include "Beyond Binaries: Rereading Yang Lian's 'Norlang' and 'Banpo,' " in Journal of Modern Literature in Chinese 6.1 (2005): 152–69; and "Lyn Hejinian and Russian Estrangement," which is forthcoming in Poetics Today.

BENJAMIN ELMAN is professor of East Asian Studies and History at Princeton University, with East Asian Studies as his primary department. His teaching and research fields include Chinese intellectual and cultural history (1000–1900), the history of science in China (1600–1930), the history of education in late imperial China and Sino-Japanese cultural history (1600–1850).

JOHN W. GARVER teaches in the Sam Nunn School of International Affairs at Georgia Institute of technology. His research investigates China's foreign relations, focusing for the past several years on China's links with Southwest, Southern, and central Asia. A Study of China-Iran relations is forthcoming in 2006 with the University of Washington Press.

JOHN GILES is an assistant professor of economics at Michigan State University. His research focuses on labour, development and transition economics with a special emphasis on empirical research in China. His current survey projects include an ongoing survey research on urban labour markets and a survey of changes in governance and land tenure institutions in rural China.

HENRIETTA HARRISON is lecturer in Chinese at the University of Leeds. She is the author of The Making of the Republican Citizen: State Ceremonies and Political Symbols in China 1911–1929 (2000) and The Man Awakened from Dreams: One Man's Life in a North China Village 1857–1942 (2005).

THOMAS HEBERER is professor of political science and East Asian Studies at the University of Duisburg-Essen in Germany. He has published extensively on various issues of social and political change in China and Vietnam, nationalities issues, corruption, and private sector development. One of his recent books is Private Entrepreneurs in China and Vietnam: Social and Political Functioning of Strategic Groups (2003).

BEVERLEY HOOPER is professor of Chinese Studies at the University of Sheffield. Her recent research has been on consumer rights in China during the reform era.

CHRISTOPHER HOWE FBA is research professor in Chinese business management, School of Oriental and African Studies.

WILLIAM HURST, a political scientist, is a postdoctoral fellow in Modern Chinese Studies at the University of Oxford. His research has focused mainly on the contemporary politics of laid-off workers in the Chinese state sector. His most recent publication on this topic is "Understanding Contentious Collective Action by Chinese Laid-off

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000130 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Workers: the Importance of Regional Political Economy," Studies in Comparative International Development, 39:2 (2004).

DAVID KELLY is Senior Research Fellow in the East Asian Institute, National University of Singapore. His research interests include China's intellectual history, political development and identity politics. He recently published translations and analysis of the work of Qin Hui (in three issues of The Chinese Economy, 2005).

TSEEN KHOO is a Monash University Research Fellow (2004–2009), based in Sociology, School of Political and Social Inquiry, Australia. She has published on Asian-Australian cultural production and politics, multicultural/race issues in Australia, and Asian-Canadian literature. Her monograph, Banana Bending: Asian-Australian and Asian-Canadian Literatures, was published in 2003.

HUAIYIN LI is assistant professor of history at the University of Missouri-Columbia. He is author of Village Governance in North China, 1875–1936. His current research focuses on rural China after 1949.

LU HANCHAO is professor of History at the Georgia Institute of Technology. His recent publications include Beyond the Neon Lights: Everyday Shanghai in the Early Twentieth Century (2004), which won the Urban History Association Best Book Award, and Street Criers: A Cultural History of Chinese Beggars (2005).

DARRIN MAGEE is a PhD candidate in Geography at the University of Washington (Seattle, USA), and a research affiliate at the Asian International Rivers Center (Kunming, China). His research focuses on decision-making processes related to large-scale hydropower in south-western China, particularly on trans-boundary rivers. He expects to complete his dissertation by summer 2006.

KIMBERLEY ENS MANNING is an assistant professor of political science at Concordia University. Her current research focuses on mass mobilization and state-building in post-revolutionary contexts. She is particularly interested in the institutional and discursive foundations of gender transformation and resistance in peasant communities. She is currently writing a book entitled Peasant Utopias: Gender and Revolutionary Mobilization in Maoist China.

JEAN MICHAUD is a social anthropologist at Université de Montréal. Since 1987 he has conducted anthropological research in highland India, Thailand, Laos, and Vietnam on the topic of social change and adjustment to modernity among highland minorities in these countries. He is the author of The Historical Dictionary of the Peoples of the Southeast Asian Massif (2006), the editor of Turbulent Times and Enduring Peoples: Mountain Minorities in the South-East Asian Massif (2000) and the co-editor of Hmong/Miao in Asia (2004).

ALBERT PARK is an associate professor of economics at the University of Michigan. His research interests are in development, transition, labour and applied microeconomics. Much of his research focuses on the Chinese economy, including current survey projects on urban labour markets, and rural education, health and labour outcomes.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000130 Published online by Cambridge University Press

PETER C. PERDUE is T. T. and Wei Fong Chao professor of Asian civilizations and professor of History at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. His new book, China Marches West: The Qing Conquest of Central Eurasia (2005), discusses environmental change, ethnicity, long-term economic change and military conquest in an integrated account of the Chinese, Mongolian, and Russian contention over Siberia and Central Eurasia during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

PITMAN B. POTTER is director of the Institute of Asian Research at the University of British Columbia. He is also professor of Law and director of Chinese Legal Studies at UBC's Faculty of Law. Dr. His teaching and research are focused on PRC and Taiwan law and policy in the areas of foreign trade and investment, dispute resolution, intellectual property, contracts, business regulation and human rights.

XIAOCHUN QIAO is professor of demographics at the Institute of Population Research, Peking University.

MICHAEL SCHOENHALS is associate professor of Sinology with special emphasis on modern Chinese society and politics in the department of East Asian languages, Lund University.

STEVE SMITH is professor of history at the University of Essex. He is the author of Like Cattle and Horses: Nationalism and Labor in Shanghai, 1895–1927 (2002).

MARINA SVENSSON is an associate professor at the Centre for East and Southeast Asian Studies, Lund University, Sweden. Her research focuses on human rights and social and legal developments in China.

JEREMY E. TAYLOR holds a PhD in history from the Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies at the Australian National University. He is interested in the modern cultural history of the Chinese-speaking world, and currently resides in Taipei.

XIAOWEN TIAN is a lecturer in Chinese business and management in Nottingham University Business School. His most recent book is Managing International Business in China (forthcoming).

TIMOTHY B. WESTON is associate professor of history at the University of Colorado with a specialization in modern Chinese history. He is the author of The Power of Position: Beijing University, Intellectuals, and Chinese Political Culture, 1898–1929 (2004) and the co-editor of China beyond the Headlines (2000).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000130 Published online by Cambridge University Press