Contributors to this Issue

NOEL D. CARY is College Honors Director, Director of German Studies, and Associate Professor of History at the College of the Holy Cross (Worcester, MA 01610–2395; e-mail: ncary@holycross.edu). His book, The Path to Christian Democracy, was published by Harvard University Press in 1996. His series of articles on Ostpolitik and German reunification appeared in this journal and in The Journal of Modern History during 2000–2001. His recent conference paper, "Murder and Memory at the Munich Olympics," is part of a developing project on Olympic politics in divided Germany.

SEAN A. FORNER is a Ph. D. candidate in history at the University of Chicago (1126 E. 59th Str., Chicago, IL 60637; e-mail:saforner@uchicago.edu). His dissertation is entitled, "Catastrophe and Democratic Renewal: German Intellectuals between East and West, 1945-1957."

MARK LANDSMAN (e-mail:MarkLandsman@compuserve.com) received his Ph. D. from Columbia University in 2000. He has taught European and World History at Rutgers University and Long Island University. The present article is part of a larger project, entitled, "Dictatorship and Demand," which is a history of the politics of consumerism in East Germany between 1948 and 1961. "Dictatorship and Demand" was awarded the Historical Society's Theodore S. Hamerow Prize for Best Dissertation in European History in 2002.

https://doi.org/10.1163/156916102770891205 Published online by Cambridge University Press