Contributors

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London.

HUGH D. R. BAKER is emeritus professor of Chinese at SOAS and has published widely on Chinese culture, language, and society. He has a particular interest in Hong Kong, where he conducted fieldwork research from the 1960s onwards.

WILL BUCKINGHAM is a PhD candidate in the geography department at the University of Washington. His research interests include the governance of China's peri-urban districts and labour migration.

KAM WING CHAN is a professor in geography at the University of Washington. His research focuses on China's urbanization, migration and the household registration system. He has recently served as a consultant for the United Nations, World Bank and McKinsey & Co.

XIAOJIONG DING is an associated professor of the Shanghai Academy of Educational Sciences. She has studied minban education and policy implementation in China for about ten years, and is now interested in policymaking, policy implementation and studying China's education from a comparative perspective. A book based on her PhD thesis will be published by Lexington Books.

RICHARD LOUIS EDMONDS is visiting professor in the geographical studies program and associate member, Center for East Asian Studies, University of Chicago. His interests focus around historical geography and environmental studies. He was editor of The China Quarterly from 1996–2002. Dr. Edmonds has written extensively on China, Japan, Taiwan, Macau and Hong Kong. His most recent contribution is China's Embedded Activism: Opportunities and Constraints of a Social Movement (Routledge, 2007), co-edited with Peter Ho.

HARRIET EVANS is professor of Chinese cultural studies at the Centre for the Study of Democracy, University of Westminster. Her publications include Women and Sexuality in China: Discourses of Female Sexuality and Gender since 1949 (Polity Press, 1997); Picturing Power in the People's Republic of China: Posters of the Cultural Revolution (co-edited with Stephanie Donald, Rowman and Littlefield, 1999), and The Subject of Gender: Daughters and Mothers in Urban China (Rowman and Littlefield, 2007). Her current research projects include an oral history of everyday life in "south Beijing" (Dashilanr), and an ethnographic study of Chinese perspectives on propaganda posters, in collaboration with Stephanie Hemelryk Donald, funded by the Australian Research Council.

JOSEPH FEWSMITH is professor of international relations and political science as well as director of the East Asia interdisciplinary studies program at Boston University. His most recent book is China Since Tiananmen: From Deng Xiaoping to Hu Jintao (Cambridge University Press, 2008). He is also one of the six regular contributors to China Leadership Monitor, a quarterly web publication analysing current developments in China, and a research associate of the John King Fairbank Center for East Asian Studies at Harvard University.

DOUGLAS FULLER is a lecturer in the department of management of King's College, University of London. His main research interests are the political economy of development and comparative technology policy with a regional focus on East Asia.

DANIEL R. HAMMOND is a third-year PhD student at the department of politics, University of Glasgow. His research is on the emergence and development of the urban resident minimum living standard.

STEVAN HARRELL is professor of anthropology at the University of Washington. His

© The China Quarterly, 2008 doi:10.1017/S0305741008000866

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000866 Published online by Cambridge University Press

latest book, with Bamo Ayi and Ma Lunzy, is Fieldwork Connections: The Fabric of Ethnographic Collaboration in China and America (University of Washington Press, 2007). With Zhou Yingying, Han Hua and others, he is working on "Dahua's Wedding," an ethnographic film about changes in family, marriage, dating and sex in Panzhihua.

HAN HUA received her PhD in cultural anthropology from Washington State University. Her research interests include marriage, gender, sexuality and political economy. Her recent publication investigates the effects of migration on bachelorhood in a rural community in Southwest China.

ALEXANDER C. Y. HUANG is assistant professor of comparative literature at the Pennsylvania State University. He is the author of Chinese Shakespeares: A Century of Cultural Exchange (Columbia University Press, 2009) and co-editor, with Charles Ross, of Shakespeare in Hollywood, Asia and Cyberspace (Purdue University Press, 2009). His works have appeared in MLQ: Modern Language Quarterly, Asian Theatre Journal, The International Shakespearean Yearbook, China Review International, and other journals and collections.

CHANG-TAI HUNG is chair professor of humanities in the division of humanities at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology.

JOYCE K. KALLGREN is emerita professor of political science at the University of California, Davis, and research associate at the Center for Chinese Studies, University of California, Berkeley.

JAMES KAI-SING KUNG is professor in the division of social science at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. He researches on the economic history and development of contemporary China.

MELANIE MANION is professor of political science and public affairs at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. Her current research examines how local people's congresses navigate their agency relationships with ordinary citizens and the Communist Party.

ROBERT W. MEAD is currently an assistant professor in the department of economics at California State University–Fullerton. His research focuses on various development and transition issues in China where he has had several articles published.

CARL RISKIN is distinguished professor of economics at Queens College, City University of New York, and senior research scholar at the Weatherhead East Asian Institute of Columbia University.

VERA SCHWARCZ is Mansfield Freeman professor of history and East Asian studies and director of the Center for East Asian Studies at Wesleyan University. She is author of several books, including Bridge Across Broken Time: Chinese and Jewish Cultural Memory (Yale University Press, 1998), a finalist for the National Jewish Book Award.

IAN SCOTT is emeritus professor of government and politics at Murdoch University and holds visiting appointments at the City University of Hong Kong and at the University of Hong Kong.

DAVID SHAMBAUGH is director of the China Policy Program at George Washington University and a non-resident senior fellow in the Foreign Policy Studies Program at the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C. He served as Editor of The China Quarterly from 1991 to 1996. His most recent book is China's Communist Party: Atrophy and Adaptation (University of California Press, 2008).

STEFAN STÄHLE studied international relations at Technische Universität Dresden (BA) and Asian studies at the George Washington University (MA). Following his studies, he worked for a German development aid agency in Beijing. He now works for the German government in Berlin.

JEFFREY N. WASSERSTROM is a professor of history at the University of California, Irvine. He is co-founder and regular contributor to The China Beat: Blogging How the East is Red. His books include China's Brave New World (Indiana University Press, 2007) and Global Shanghai, 1850–2010 (forthcoming with Routledge).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000866 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Susanne Weigelin-Schwiedrzik is professor of Sinology at the department of East Asian studies at the University of Vienna. Her main field of research is modern Chinese history and historiography as well as Chinese politics. Recent publications focus on the re-writing of post-1949 history in the PRC and on state–society relations.

Felix Wemheuer is assistant professor at the Institute for East Asian studies / Sinology at the University of Vienna. His new book "Stone Noodles: Rural and Official Memories of the Great Leap Famine in the Chinese Province Henan" has been published by Peter Lang. He studied politics of East Asia at the Ruhr University of Bochum (Germany) and history of the Communist Party of China at the People's University in Beijing. Currently, Felix Wemheuer is carrying out research on "The Politicization of Hunger: Discourses of Food and State-Peasant Relationships in Socialist China and the Soviet Union" as a visiting scholar at the Fairbank Center at Harvard University.

Xiaogang Wu is associate professor of social science in the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology (HKUST). He was National Academy of Education/Spencer Post-doctoral Fellow (2006–2007). His research interests include social stratification and mobility, labour markets and economic sociology, and statistical methods. His articles have appeared in American Sociological Review, Social Forces, and Demography. He currently studies the impact of economic reforms on educational stratification and the political attitude of private entrepreneurs in reform-era China.

Yu Xie is Otis Dudley Duncan distinguished university professor of sociology and statistics at the University of Michigan. He is also a research professor at the Population Studies Center and the Survey Research Center of the Institute for Social Research, and a faculty associate at the Center for Chinese studies. His main areas of interest are social stratification, demography, statistical methods, Chinese studies and sociology of science. He has recently published Women in Science: Career Processes and Outcomes (Harvard University Press, 2003) with Kimberlee Shauman, A Demographic Portrait of Asian Americans (Russell Sage Foundation and Population Reference Bureau, 2004) with Kimberly Goyette, and Marriage and Cohabitation (University of Chicago Press, 2007) with Arland Thornton and William Axinn.

Heather Xiaoquan Zhang is senior lecturer at the department of East Asian studies, The University of Leeds, UK. Her research focuses on China's development, rural–urban migration and livelihood, gender, social policy, in particular health and well-being. Her recent publications include an edited volume (with Bin Wu and Richard Sanders) Marginalization in China: Perspectives on Transition and Globalization (Ashgate, 2007).

Qian Forrest Zhang teaches sociology at the School of Social Sciences, Singapore Management University. His current research looks at the rise of agrarian capitalism in rural China. A first paper from that project, co-authored with John A. Donaldson, has appeared in the July 2008 issue of The China Journal.

Zhou Yingying is a doctoral candidate in sociology at the University of Washington. Her research focus is on Chinese population and society, and she is currently conducting a longitudinal study on the determinants and effects of internal migration in China. She also holds a Master of Public Health degree from the University of Washington.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000866 Published online by Cambridge University Press