New books

Short annotations of recent publications, which aim to be informative and objective but not critical, together with a list of books and materials received.

Bangura, Abdul Karim and Martin C. Muo

United States Congress and bilingual education. Peter Lang Publishing, 2001. 162pp. ISBN 0 8204 40000, US$24.95, pb.

This book seeks to fill a gap in the literature of the politics of bilingual education in the United States: the role of the legislative branch of the national government in the passage of the 1968 Bilingual Education Act and its aftermath. The issues examined in the book include the type of environment in which the bilingual education debate emerged, the positions of the competing factions that lobbied Congress, the roles played by the legislative branch, and the end result.

Cook, Vivian

Second language learning and language teaching. Arnold, 2001, 3rd edn. ISBN 0 340 76192 X, £14.99, pb.

The main aim of this book is to tell those concerned with language teaching about ideas on how people acquire second languages coming from second language acquisition (SLA) research, and to suggest how these might benefit language teaching. The book generally widens its scope from particular aspects of language to broader contexts and more general ideas. This third edition has been extensively updated and revised using feedback from teachers who have worked with the previous editions. It offers a fuller discussion of language teaching and increased emphasis on the importance of enabling students to become independent second language users. In particular, it highlights some of the contradictions between SLA research and standard language teaching beliefs, by analysing standard handbooks for the teaching of English as a foreign language and coursebooks from various countries.

Dörnyei, Zoltán

Teaching and researching motivation. Longman (Applied Linguistics in Action series), 2001. xii+295pp. ISBN 0 582 38238 6, £14.99, pb.

This book addresses key questions regarding the nature of motivation, and how it might be described, enhanced and assessed. The author sets out to provide a theoretical summary of the various facets of motivation; to examine how the theoretical insights can help classroom practitioners in their everyday teaching practice; and to explore how motivation can be researched and assessed. The final section of the book contains a variety of resources, including relevant websites, lists of key reference works, and over 150 actual questionnaire items successfully used by the author in the past.

Ganguly, S. R. and L. S. Ramaiah

English language and literature teaching in India: a bibliography. New Delhi: Munshiram Manoharial Publishers Pvt. Ltd., 2000. 184pp. Rs.375.

This is a classified bibliography of books, research reports, official and semi-official documents and journal articles on English language and literature teaching in India. The bibliography covers 2560 entries in 65 sections grouped broadly into five areas, and also includes three appendices and an author index. The Preface, introduction, and the Editors' foreword provide readers with the essential background to the broad area of English studies. The volume is organised by topic, and individual sections on major trends in research in India focus on salient theoretical perspectives and language pedagogy. The bibliography highlights how research has developed over a period of time in post-independent India, and deals with current concerns with English language and literature teaching in India.

Grabe, William and Fredericka L. Stoller

Teaching and researching reading. Longman (Applied Linguistics in Action series), 2001. xi+304pp. ISBN 0 582 36995 9, £14.99, pb.

This book is designed to help language professionals understand the complex nature of reading. It seeks to build connections from research on reading to sound instructional practices and action research possibilities. Offering an overview of reading theory, it summarises the main ideas and issues in first and second language contexts and covers key research studies. The authors then explicitly link this research to teaching practice. They offer practical advice for practitioners and researchers, including a 12-point procedure for conducting action research projects on reading-related topics, with 27 outlined models for teacher adaptation.

Heller, Monica and Marilyn Martin-Jones (eds.)

Voices of authority: Education and linguistic difference. Ablex Publishing (Contemporary Studies in Linguistics and Education series, vol. 1), 2001. xi+442pp. ISBN 1 56750 531 7, £28.95, pb.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0261444801219247 Published online by Cambridge University Press

The aims in putting together this collection were twofold: (1) to highlight the role played by educational institutions in multilingual societies in the construction of cultural identities, in the production and distribution of prestigious cultural and linguistic resources, and in the reproduction of social inequalities; and (2) to show that an investigation of the communicative practices of learners and educators in the daily cycles of life in educational settings can lead to a fuller understanding of these processes of production and reproduction in education. The chapters in this volume provide close ethnographic analyses of socially and historically situated cases from a wide range of settings. It is argued that insights from such situated accounts are essential to theory building and to substantive generalisation. The cases include a variety of educational sites in postcolonial, indigenous, and immigrant settings; and the introduction and conclusion to the book attempt to bring these situated accounts together within a unifying frame.

Hyland, Ken

Teaching and researching writing. Longman (Applied Linguistics in Action series), 2001. x+248pp. ISBN 0 582 42338 4, £14.99, pb.

This book sets out to offer a comprehensive overview of writing research and teaching. The author outlines the historical and conceptual background to the field of writing, deals with current questions relating to both practice and research, and outlines the direction which the field is moving in. In addition to a full discussion of the current application of research in terms of courses, materials, teaching practices and software, the volume also offers practical suggestions for teaching approaches, and includes a chapter setting out a number of do-able, small-scale research projects.

Parkinson, Brian and Helen Reid Thomas

Teaching literature in a second language. Edinburgh University Press (Edinburgh Textbooks in Applied Linguistics series), 2000. x+205pp. ISBN 0 7486 1259 9, £16.95, pb.

This book focuses on the relationship of language and literature in the context of the classroom. It examines both the language of literature as it occurs in a variety of texts from different genres and the language of the classroom as teachers and learners respond in speech and writing to those texts. While giving specific examples from the main literary genres of poetry, short stories, novels and drama, the authors are also concerned with the wider issues that affect all teachers, such as assessment, evaluation, planning and working with a syllabus, and teacher development. Exercises and suggestions for further work are included for each section. The book is addressed primarily to students of applied linguistics and to practising teachers, and is relevant both to teachers of English as a Foreign/Second Language, and to those who come from a background of literature teaching.

Rost, Michael

Teaching and researching listening. Longman (Applied Linguistics in Action series), 2001. xii+320pp. ISBN 0 582 36930 4, £14.99, pb.

This book first discusses the history, context and background to listening, then looks at key questions that can be addressed through research and provides practical ideas for linking research issues to actual teaching practice. The author treats listening in language learning as a distinct field of enquiry, arguing that the traditional approach of including listening as part of oral language or communication studies does not do the topic justice. The book sets out to provide a thorough and practical treatment of both the linguistic and pragmatic processes involved in oral language use from the perspective of the listener. It also includes a broad range of ideas and practical tools for the construction of teaching and research models.

Thomason, Sarah G.

Language contact: An introduction. Edinburgh University Press, 2001. x+310pp. ISBN 0 7486 0719 6, pb.

Language contact is everywhere: many nations have more than one official language, and quite possibly most people in the world speak two or more languages. In this survey of the social, political and linguistic consequences of language contact, the author focuses on what happens to the languages themselves – sometimes nothing, sometimes new words enter a language, sometimes new sounds and sentence structures will spread across many languages in a large geographical region; more rarely, entirely new languages arise in a contact situation. Conversely, one of the languages in contact may vanish entirely, and issues of language endangerment and death are explored here, together with chapters on multilingualism, pidgins and creoles, mechanisms of interference, and the origins and results of contact-induced language change. The volume is intended as both an introduction for beginning students at all levels, and a resource for postgraduates, teachers and academic linguists.

List of periodicals

The following periodicals are regularly scanned in compiling the abstracts, although it should be noted that not every issue of a periodical that is scanned will be represented in every volume of Language Teaching. The majority of the periodicals are held in the CiLT (Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research) Library in London, UK (see address on inside front cover), together with additional publications such as newsletters and bulletins which are scanned but rarely contain abstractable articles. A complete list may be obtained from the CiLT Librarian; or is available on the web at:
