In 1968, The Clay Minerals Society established a category of membership to honor those individuals who are recognized for distinguished achievement in the field of clay science. Persons so honored are selected on the basis of their outstanding contributions to the field and are awarded the lifelong title of "Distinguished Member." The first award in this category was made to Ralph E. Grim at the 1968 Clay Minerals Conference at the University of Indiana. Since that time, eight other clay scientists have been designated "Distinguished Members."
