Contributors to this Issue

DEREK HASTINGS is a Lecturer in the Department of History at the University of Chicago (1126 East 59th Street, Chicago, IL 60637; e-mail: d-hastings@uchicago.edu), where he is currently completing a dissertation on Catholic intellectuals in early twentieth-century Germany. In the fall of 2003 he begins a tenure-track appointment as Assistant Professor of History at Oakland University in Rochester, Michigan.

RUDY J. KOSHAR is the DAAD Professor of German and European Studies at the University of Wisconsin-Madison (Madison, WI 53706; e-mail: rjkoshar@wisc.edu). His recent books include German Travel Cultures (Oxford, 2000); From Monuments to Traces: Artifacts of German Memory, 1870–1990 (Berkeley, 2000); and an edited volume, Histories of Leisure (Oxford, 2002). He is at work on a history of driving and cultures of automobility in twentieth-century Europe and the U.S.

MARCUS KREUZER is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Villanova University (Villanova, PA 19085–1699; e-mail: markus.kreuzer@villanova.edu). His work focuses on the role formal institutions play in the transition to and consolidation of liberal democracy. In the past, he worked on the role parties played in the democratization of late nineteenth-century and interwar France and Germany. He is the author of Institutions and Innovation — Voters, Politicians and Interest Groups in the Consolidation of Democracy: France and Germany, 1870–1939 (Ann Arbor, 2001). He is currently working on the origins of liberal democracy in nineteenth-century Europe and on the consolidation of post-Communist party systems in Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

KENNETH F. LEDFORD is Associate Professor of History and Law and Director of the Max Kade Center for German Studies at Case Western Reserve University (Department of History, 11201 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, OH, 44106–7107; e-mail: kenneth.ledford@cwru.edu). He is the author of From General Estate to Special Interest: German Lawyers 1878–1933 (New York, 1996) and most recently of an article, "Judicial Independence and Political Representation: Prussian Judges as Parliamentary Deputies, 1849–1913," Law and Social Inquiry 25 (2000): 1049–75. At present, he is writing a book that traces the relationship of judges and the rule of law in the nineteenth century, to be called "Prussian Judges and the Rule of Law in Germany, 1848–1914."

https://doi.org/10.1163/156916103771006106 Published online by Cambridge University Press

JONATHAN SPERBER is Curators' Professor of History at the University of Missouri, Columbia (Department of History, 101 Read Hall, Columbia, MO 65211–7500; e-mail: sperber@missouri.edu). His most recent works include Revolutionary Europe, 1780–1850 (2000) and, coedited with Dieter Dowe, Heinz-Gerhard Haupt, and Dieter Langewiesche, Europe in 1848: Revolution and Reform (2001). He is currently editing the 1800–1870 volume in the Oxford Short History of Germany and working on a study of family, property, and the law in southwestern Germany during the nineteenth century.

https://doi.org/10.1163/156916103771006106 Published online by Cambridge University Press