Contributors

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London.

ELIZABETH C. BROTHERTON, is associate professor of Asian art at the State University of New York at New Paltz. Her research interests focus on the relationship between painting and poetry, on which she has published articles in Artibus Asiae and Archives of Asian Art.

CONG CAO is a senior research associate with the Neil D. Levin Graduate Institute of International Relations and Commerce, the State University of New York.

YIXIN CHEN is an associate professor of history at the University of North Carolina Wilmington

PARKS M. COBLE is professor of East Asian history at the University of Nebraska. His most recent book is Chinese Capitalists in Japan's New Order: The Occupied Lower Yangzi, 1937–1945 (University of California Press, 2003).

KIRK A. DENTON teaches modern Chinese literature and culture at Ohio State University. He is editor of the journal Modern Chinese Literature and Culture and is currently working on a book entitled Exhibiting the Past: Politics and Ideology in Museums in the People's Republic of China, Taiwan, and Hong Kong.

BRUCE J. DICKSON is professor of political science and international affairs at George Washington University. He is the author of Red Capitalists in China: The Party, Private Entrepreneurs, and Prospects for Political Change (Cambridge University Press, 2003).

RICHARD LOUIS EDMONDS is visiting professor in the geographical studies program and associate member, Center for East Asian Studies, University of Chicago. His interests focus around historical geography and environmental studies. He was editor of The China Quarterly from 1996 to 2002.

FU HUALING is associate professor, Faculty of Law, University of Hong Kong. He teaches and researches in the areas of human rights, law and development, criminal law and corruption.

LUCA GABBIANI heads the Ecole française d'Extrême-Orient (EFEO)'s Taipei office in the Institute of History and Philology of the Academia Sinica. His research interests are centred on China's institutional and urban history in the 19th- and early 20th-centuries and on the modernisation of Chinese traditional law over the same period.

STEVEN M. GOLDSTEIN is Sophia Smith Professor of Government at Smith College and a Fellow of the Asia Center, Harvard University.

WILLIAM HURST is assistant professor of government at the University of Texas at Austin. He has researched the politics of workers laid-off from Chinese state owned enterprises. On this subject, he recently published an article, "Understanding Contentious Collective Action by Chinese Laid-off Workers: the Importance of Regional Political Economy" (2004), and is completing a book manuscript entitled The Chinese Worker after Socialism.

MATTHEW DAVID JOHNSON is a PhD candidate at the University of California, San Diego. He has written articles and reviews on Chinese-language cinema, and is completing a dissertation on state cinema, internationalism, and the exhibition of "New China" during the mid-20th century.

RAPHAEL KAPLINSKY is professor of international development at the department of policy and practice, the Open University, where he co-ordinates the Asian Drivers team which focuses on the impact of China and India on the developing world. His personal research (in collaboration with African scholars, including in the African Economic Research Consortium)

© The China Quarterly, 2007 doi:10.1017/S0305741007002214

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741007002214 Published online by Cambridge University Press

addresses the impact of the Asian Driver economies on Sub-Saharan Africa.

JOHAN LAGERKVIST is a research fellow with the Swedish Institute of International Affairs in Stockholm. He authored The Internet in China: Unlocking and Containing the Public Sphere (Lund University, 2006) and is currently working on a research project that studies the tensions between different Chinese nationalism(s) and how that tension impacts upon Chinese foreign policy.

DAVID M. LAMPTON is dean of faculty, director of China studies, and Hyman Professor at the School of Advanced International Studies at Johns Hopkins University. His forthcoming book, The Three Faces of Chinese Power: Might, Money, and Minds, will be published in early 2008 by the University of California Press.

KHAN-PYO LEE is research assistant professor at Business School of Sungkyunkwan University, Seoul, Korea. His current research focuses on inter-firm networks in China's emerging economic order and the political economy of industrial restructuring in the country's auto industry.

LINDA CHELAN LI is associate professor at the department of public and social administration, City University of Hong Kong and the author of Centre and Provinces: China, 1978–1993. Power as Non-zero-sum (Clarendon, 1998). Her research interests include intergovernmental relations, rule of law and institutionalization, and politics of investment and public finance. Currently she is working on fiscal institutional change and local government reforms in China and a project on responsible government in East Asia.

SUSANNE LINGOHR's first degree was in area studies China at the University of Cologne, Germany. Subsequently, she took an MSc in development studies at SOAS, where she is now a PhD candidate in the Centre for Financial and Management Studies. Her doctoral research focuses on rural household involvement in the post-harvest agro-economy in China. Her research interests include China's agro-economy, rural development and rural livelihoods.

LIU SHIYUNG is assistant research fellow in the Institute of Taiwan History, Academia Sinica, Taiwan, and teaches at the Taipei Medical University. His research is focused on Japanese colonial medicine and epidemic condition in 19th–20th century southern China. He published "Differential Mortality in Colonial Taiwan" (Annales de démographie historique, 2004) and "Building a Strong and Healthy Empire: The critical period of building Japanese colonial medicine in Taiwan" (Japanese Studies, 2004). He is currently a visiting scholar at the Harvard-Yenching Institute, Harvard University, 2006–07.

MA NGOK is currently associate professor at the department of government and public administration, Chinese University of Hong Kong. His research areas include party politics and elections in Hong Kong, state-society relations in Hong Kong, comparative politics, political economy and the post-communist transformation in East-Central Europe. He currently focuses on teaching and researching on a wide range of issues concerning post-1997 political development in Hong Kong. He is author of Political Consequences of Electoral Laws: The Hong Kong Proportional Representation System (City University Press, 2003), and Political Development in Hong Kong: State, Political Society and Civil Society (University of Hong Kong Press, Forthcoming).

STEPHEN L. MORGAN is associate professor at the School of Contemporary Chinese Studies, the University of Nottingham. Until September 2007, he was senior lecturer in Asian economic history in the department of management and marketing, the University of Melbourne, where he taught strategy and international business with a focus on Asia. His research is focused on 19th–20th century economic and business history of China. Recent articles include "Transfer of Taylorism to China, 1910–1930s" (Journal of Management History, 2006) and "Australian Immigration Archives as Sources for Business and Economic History"

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741007002214 Published online by Cambridge University Press

(Australian Economic History Review, 2006). He is the co-editor of the Australian Economic History Review.

JANE NOLAN is a Nuffield Foundation New Career Fellow in the Faculty of Social and Political Sciences, University of Cambridge, where she is also a director of studies at Magdalene College. She is currently researching the social networks of foreign and local financial experts in Hong Kong and Shanghai.

BARBARA L.K. PILLSBURY is a medical anthropologist who has worked in China on public health matters and ethnicity since 1978 and on AIDS and other sexually-transmitted infections in Yunnan province since 1995.

HELEN F. SIU is professor of anthropology at Yale University and honorary director of the Hong Kong Institute for the Humanities and Social Sciences, Hong Kong University.

BRYAN TILT is an assistant professor of anthropology at Oregon State University, USA. His research focuses on aspects of rural development in China, including agricultural systems, industrialization and pollution.

EDDY U received his PhD from the sociology department of the University of California, Berkeley. He teaches at the department of Chinese studies of the University of Sydney.

R. BIN WONG teaches Chinese and Asian history at UCLA where he serves as director of its Asia Institute; his current research includes a co-authored volume comparing Chinese and European economic history, and a book on contemporary Chinese political economy in historical perspective.

LIN YI obtained his PhD degree in sociology at Bristol University in 2005, and is currently associate professor of sociology at Xiamen University. Dr Yi's research focuses upon culture and inequality, with particular reference to ethnicity, class and cultural globalization. Lin is also interested in the interaction between migration, media and culture, and how this casts new light on cultural citizenship. Except for a few individual articles exploring culture and inequality, Lin's book manuscript Inequality through Cultural Exclusion in China is also under contract with Routledge. Dr Yi used to be a lecturer of Chinese in both Chinese and Italian universities.

HONG ZHANG is assistant professor of East Asian studies at Colby College. Her current research interests include family and gender relations, birth control policy, changing patterns of marriage and elder-care, labour migration, and labour-rights NGOs in China.

TIANTIAN ZHENG is assistant professor of sociology at State University of New York, Cortland, and co-ordinator of Asian/Middle Eastern Studies.

YIHENG HENRY ZHAO is professor in literary theory at Sichuan University, Chengdu. His main publications include The Uneasy Narrator, Chinese Fiction from the Traditional to the Modern (Oxford University Press 1995), and Towards a Modern Zen Theatre: Gao Xingjian and Chinese Theatre Experimentalism (SOAS, 2000).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741007002214 Published online by Cambridge University Press