Contributors

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London.

DANIEL H. BAYS is professor of history and director of the Asian Studies Program at Calvin College, Grand Rapids, Michigan. He is editor of Christianity in China: From the 18th Century to the Present (Stanford University Press, 1996), and author of the chapter on China in The Cambridge History of Christianity, vol. 8, World Christianities, c. 1815–1914 (Cambridge University Press, 2006).

NICOLAS BECQUELIN is associate fellow at the Universities Service Centre, The Chinese University of Hong Kong. He received his PhD in History from the School of Advanced Studies in Social Sciences (EHESS), Paris, and is a former fellow at the French Research Centre on Contemporary China (CEFC), Hong Kong.

DONALD C. CLARKE is a professor at the George Washington University Law School in Washington, DC. His work focuses on legal institutions, law and economic reform, and law and social change in China.

SARAH COOK is a research fellow at the Institute of Development Studies, University of Sussex. From 2000 to 2005 she was the Ford Foundation's Program Officer for Governance and Public Policy in Beijing. Her research focuses on the social impacts of economic reform in China, and includes work on employment, labour markets and welfare, gender, poverty and rural governance. Current projects include research on China's informal employment and social protection.

ERICA S. DOWNS is a fellow in the John L. Thornton China Center at the Brookings Institution.

JAMES V. FEINERMAN is James M. Morita professor of Asian legal studies at Georgetown University Law Center. He has also taught as a visitor at both Harvard and Yale Law Schools.

FU HUALING is associate professor and director of the Centre for Comparative and Public Law, Faculty of Law, the University of Hong Kong. He teaches and researches on human rights, constitutional law and the criminal justice system, with a focus on Greater China. With Lison Harris and Simon Young he recently co-edited The Struggle for Coherence: Constitutional Interpretation in Hong Kong (forthcoming with Palgrave Macmillan, 2008).

BRUCE GILLEY is an assistant professor of political studies at Queen's University in Canada. His research interests focus on democracy, democratization, legitimacy, and modernization theory.

ERIC GREEN recently received his PhD in political science from Western Michigan University.

CHARLES W. HAYFORD is an independent scholar and visiting scholar in the history department of Northwestern University. He is the editor of the Journal of American-East Asian Relations.

HE WEIFANG is professor of law at Peking University Faculty of Law and editor-in-chief of Peking University Law Journal.

CARSTEN A. HOLZ is associate professor in the social science division of the Hong Kong University of Science & Technology. His current research focuses on Chinese data quality and on economic growth in China.

CAROLYN L. HSU is an associate professor of sociology at Colgate University. She is the author of Creating Market Socialism: How Ordinary People are Shaping Class and Status in China (Duke University Press, 2007), as well as works on political corruption, entrepreneurship and state/private hybrid firms in China. Her current research is on the rise of charities and NGOs in the PRC.

© The China Quarterly, 2007 doi:10.1017/S0305741007001749

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741007001749 Published online by Cambridge University Press

HUANG DONGLI is professor of law and director of the international economic law division of the Institute of Law of Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS). She specializes in international trade law, jurisprudence, and the law and economics.

VICTORIA TIN-BOR HUI is an assistant professor in political science at the University of Notre Dame. She is the author of War and State Formation in Ancient China and Early Modern Europe (Cambridge University Press, 2005). Her research examines the dynamics of international politics, the origins of constitutional democracy, and the development of trade and capitalism in the broad sweeps of history, with a special focus on historical China and historical Europe.

MATTHEW DAVID JOHNSON is a PhD candidate at the University of California, San Diego. He has written articles and reviews on Chinese-language cinema, and is completing a dissertation on state cinema, internationalism, and the exhibition of "New China" during the mid-20th century.

LARS PETER LAAMANN is teaching and research fellow at the history department, School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. He has published articles and co-authored one monograph on the history of drugs in modern China. His other research passion is popular Chinese religion in the Qing period, especially Christianity.

DAVID M. LAMPTON is dean of faculty and Hyman professor of China studies, Johns Hopkins—SAIS. He also is senior international advisor on China for Akin Gump and on the Board of many non-governmental organizations, including the Tibet Poverty Alleviation Fund. His forthcoming book is entitled The Three Faces of Chinese Power: Might, Money, and Minds. (University of California Press, 2007).

CHAE-JIN LEE is BankAmerica Professor of Pacific Basin Studies and director of the Keck Center for International and Strategic Studies at Claremont McKenna College. His most publications include China and Korea: Dynamic Relations (Hoover Institution Press, 1996) and A Troubled Peace: US Policy and the Two Koreas (Johns Hopkins University Press, 2006).

JAMES LI ZHAOJIE is a professor of international law at Tsinghua University School of Law in Beijing. Prior to joining the faculty at Tsinghua Law School, he taught in the Department of Law at Peking University. He has served as co-chief editor for the Chinese Yearbook of International Law, and serves as vice-president of the Chinese Society of International Law.

BENJAMIN L. LIEBMAN is professor of law and the director of the Center for Chinese Legal Studies at Columbia Law School. His current research focuses on the evolution of China's courts, popular access to justice, and civil litigation. His recent publications include "Chinese Network Justice," Chicago Journal of International Law (2007) (with Tim Wu); "Evolution through Intimidation? An Empirical Account of Defamation Litigation in China," Harvard International Law Journal (2006); and "Watchdog or Demagogue? The Media in the Chinese Legal System," Columbia Law Review (2005).

RALPH LITZINGER is associate professor of cultural anthropology and director of the Asian/ Pacific Studies Institute at Duke University. He is the author of Other Chinas: The Yao and the Politics of National Belonging (Duke University Press, 2000) and of a forthcoming book on globalization, development, and environmental activism in northwest Yunnan, China.

RUI MAGONE is a research fellow at the University of Lisbon. His main research interests include the connections between education and the development of literature in late imperial China, with a special focus on the civil service examinations, and Sino-Portuguese relations from the 16th to the 18th century.

JAMES MANN is author-in-residence at Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies. His previous books include Beijing Jeep (Touchstone Books,

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741007001749 Published online by Cambridge University Press

1990), About Face: A History of America's Curious Relationship with China (Knopf, 1998), and Rise of the Vulcans (Viking, 2004). He is a former Washington correspondent and Beijing bureau chief for the Los Angeles Times.

NICHOLAS MENZIES is assistant director of the Asia Institute, Los Angeles. He recently published Our Forest, Your Ecosystem, Their Timber: Communities and the State in Community-Based Forest Management (Columbia University Press, 2007), which includes case studies from Yunnan province in China and the Kangra Valley in Himachal Pradesh, India. He is also the author of the volume on Forestry in Joseph Needham's Science and Civilisation in China (Vol. VI, .part 3. Cambridge University Press. 1996), and of Forest and Land Management in Late Imperial China (Macmillan Press. 1994)

SING MING is associate professor in the department of public and social administration at City University, Hong Kong. His research interests include the politics of Hong Kong, the democratization of East Asian Tigers and comparative political culture and political participation.

MICHAEL PALMER is professor of law at the University of London. He is a former head of the School of Law, and chair of the Centre of Chinese Studies, at SOAS. At present, he is an associate dean for research and the chair of the Centre of East Asian Law at SOAS, and honorary professor of law at Renmin University, Beijing. His research in progress includes family law reform, human rights, environmental welfare, the refurbishment of people's and judicial mediation, and the use of mediation in criminal and administrative justice systems.

PITMAN B. POTTER is director of the Institute of Asian Research at the University of British Columbia (UBC), and professor of law at UBC Law Faculty. His teaching and research are focused on PRC and Taiwan law and policy in the areas of foreign trade and investment, dispute resolution, intellectual property, contracts, business regulation, and human rights. He has published several books on China, including most recently From Leninist Discipline to Socialist Legalism: Peng Zhen on Law and Political Authority in the PRC (Stanford University Press, 2003).

JULIA YA QIN is an associate professor of law at Wayne State University Law School. Her most recent publications include "Defining Nondiscrimination under the Law of the World Trade Organization," in the Boston University International Law Journal (2005), and "'WTO-Plus' Obligations and Their Implications for the WTO Legal System – An Appraisal of the China Accession Protocol," in the Journal of World Trade (2003).

SERGEY RADCHENKO is a visiting professor of history at Pittsburg State University. His interests include history and international affairs of Inner Asia and the Far East.

GREG ROHLF is associate professor of history at the University of the Pacific in Stockton, California. His research interests include western China, population resettlement, and comparative borderlands history.

SHEN KUI is associate professor at Peking University Law School, where he obtained his PhD. His research interests include administrative law, constitutional law, and anti-discrimination law. Recent publications include "On the Approach to the Legitimization of Administrative Organization" (Journal of Legal Studies, 2005), "Legitimacy on Openness and Reflexiveness: A Normative Basis for the Change of Public Law in China" (Social Sciences in China, 2004), and "Is It the Beginning of the Era of the Rule of the Constitution? Reinterpreting China's "First Constitutional Case" (Pacific Rim Law & Policy Journal, 2003).

CHIH-YU SHIH teaches political psychology, cultural studies and China studies at National Taiwan University. His most recent publication is Autonomy, Ethnicity and Poverty in Southwestern China (Palgrave, 2007).

TANG XIN is an associate professor of law at Tsinghua University Law School in Beijing. His chief interests include corporations and the regulation of financial markets. He is the author of a book named

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741007001749 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Takeover of Listed Companies and Corporate Governance. Dr. Tang has been invited to give consultation opinions to the drafting of numerous laws, administrative decrees and Judicial Interpretations in China, he also serves as independent directors in a listed company and an Investment Fund Management Company.

MURRAY SCOT TANNER recently accepted an appointment as deputy staff director of the United States Congressional-Executive Commission on China. Prior to that, he served as a senior political scientist at the RAND Corporation in Washington, DC, and as professor of political science at Western Michigan University. Dr. Tanner has published extensively on Chinese and politics, in particular on policing and internal security, social unrest, legal reform and human rights, lawmaking, leadership politics, and Chinas relations with Taiwan and North Korea. Among his noteworthy recent publications are Chinese Economic Coercion Against Taiwan: A Tricky Weapon to Use (RAND Corporation, 2007), Chinese Responses to US Military Transformation and Implications for the Department of Defense (co-authored) (RAND Corporation, 2006), and "China Rethinks Unrest," The Washington Quarterly (2004), SEBASTIAN VEG is a researcher in literature at the French Centre for Research on Contemporary China (CEFC) in Hong Kong, specialized in the May Fourth Movement and the relationships between literature and politics.

JAMES WICKS is a second-year PhD student in the department of literature at the University of California, San Diego. His focus is Chinese-language cinema in general and Taiwan cinema specifically. He is presently working on a comparative study of the films of Xie Jin in China and Li Xing in Taiwan during the mid-1960s.

QIANG ZHAI is professor of history at Auburn University Montgomery. He is the author of China and the Vietnam Wars, 1950–1975 (University of North Carolina Press, 2000).

HONG ZHANG is assistant professor of East Asian Studies at Colby College, USA. Her current research covers labour migration, gender and changing intergenerational relations in contemporary China.

ZHANG XIANCHU is a professor of law and associate dean of the Faculty of Law, University of Hong Kong. He specializes in commercial law, Chinese law and comparative law as well as some WTO areas concerned. He currently also serves as the director of the Master of Common Law Programme, co-director of HKU-Peking U Legal Research Centre, and deputy director of the Institute of China and Global Development of the University of Hong Kong. He is an arbitrator of China International Economic and Trade Arbitration Commission (CIETAC) and a trustee of the Legal Education Trust Fund of Hong Kong,

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741007001749 Published online by Cambridge University Press