Aims & Scope

The Review of Middle East Studies (RoMES) is the Middle East Studies Association's online journal of review. Published twice a year, each issue includes a selection of roundtables, research articles, essays, brief reports on emerging topics and issues, columns on curation and pedagogical practice, in memoriam reflections on members of the Middle East studies community, discussion of online resources, and approximately 20–30 reviews of books, films, music, software, and exhibitions relevant to Middle East studies.

RoMES looks to bridge divides between fields, publics, and geographies in Middle East studies, including Islamic and cultural studies, art and architecture, and performance and political studies with an emphasis on new and evolving topics and issues in scholarship, including research methods, ethical concerns, and pedagogical practice. RoMES addresses evolving contemporary dynamics, but also publishes scholarship on premodern topics of interest to a wider audience of Middle East scholars.
