Contributors

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, all at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.

T. H. BARRETT is professor of East Asian history in the department of the study of religions at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. He is also the editor of the Bulletin of SOAS.

CATHERINE BELL is the Hanley Professor of Religious Studies and chair of the department of religious studies at Santa Clara University, California. In addition to two books on ritual (Ritual Theory, Ritual Practice (1992) and Ritual: Perspectives and Dimensions (1997)), she has also written on aspects of Daoism and Chinese popular religion.

THOMAS P. BERNSTEIN teaches Chinese politics at Columbia University.

RICHARD A. BITZINGER works for the US government. He was a senior fellow with the Atlantic Council of the United States, and has worked for the Defense Budget Project and the RAND Corporation. He is the author of "Military spending and foreign military acquisitions by the PRC and Taiwan," in James R. Lilley and Chuck Downs (eds.), Crisis in the Taiwan Strait (1997), and "'Off the books': analysing and understanding Chinese defense spending," Washington Journal of Modern China (Fall/Winter 1995). The findings and arguments expressed in this paper are strictly his own.

COSIMA BRUNO is a doctoral candidate at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. Her research focuses upon translation of contemporary Chinese poetry.

DAVID D. BUCK is emeritus professor of history at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and participated in the 1980 and 1990 international conferences on the Boxer Uprising held in Shandong.

JEAN-PIERRE CABESTAN is a senior researcher at the CNRS (French National Centre for Scientific Research), director of the French Centre for Research on Contemporary China and chief editor of China Perspectives.

CONG CAO is a research fellow at the East Asian Institute, the National University of Singapore. His interests include China's science policy, high-tech development, and the changing nature of the Chinese scientific community.

ELISABETH J. CROLL is professor of Chinese anthropology and vice-principal of the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. She has published widely on issues of social development in China. Her most recent book is Endangered Daughters: Discrimination and Development in Asia (2000).

DELIA DAVIN is professor of Chinese studies at the University of Leeds. She is the author of Internal Migration in Contemporary China (1999).

© The China Quarterly, 2003

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0009443903000159 Published online by Cambridge University Press

MARIA EDIN is a research fellow with the department of government, Uppsala University. During 2001–2002, she was a visiting postdoctoral fellow at the Institute for Chinese Studies, University of Oxford.

HARRIET EVANS is reader in Asian studies at the Centre for the Study of Democracy, University of Westminster. Her publications include Women and Sexuality in China: Dominant Discourses of Female Sexuality and Gender since 1949 (1997) and (co-edited with Stephanie Donald) Picturing Power in the People's Republic of China: Posters of the Cultural Revolution (1999). Her current research is on mothers, daughters and gender identities in China.

RICHARD DANIEL EWING is assistant director of Chinese studies at the Nixon Center in Washington, DC. His main research interests include the political implications of China's economic reforms and the Chinese leadership.

JACOB EYFERTH received his PhD from Leiden University in 2000 for his dissertation on "Eating rice from bamboo roots: the history of a papermaking community in west China, 1839–1998." He has been a postdoctoral research fellow at the Institute for Chinese Studies, University of Oxford, and at the Fairbank Center for East Asian Research at Harvard University. He is currently a research fellow at the Rutgers Center for Historical Analysis, Rutgers University. He will take up a position as assistant professor for modern Chinese history at Simon Fraser University in Vancouver from September 2003.

JOSEPH FEWSMITH is professor of international relations and political science at Boston University. His most recent books are China Since Tiananmen: The Politics of Transition (2001) and Elite Politics in Contemporary China (2001).

JOHN W. GARVER is a professor in the Sam Nunn School of International Affairs at Georgia Institute of Technology, and an associate of the China Research Center in Atlanta (http://www.chinacenter.net). His most recent publication is "The China–India–U.S. triangle: strategic relations in the post-cold war era," in NBR Analysis, October 2002, available at http://www.nbr.org.

RUTH HAYHOE is a professor at the University of Toronto and president emerita of the Hong Kong Institute of Education. Her recent books include Education, Culture and Identity in Twentieth Century China, co-edited with Glen Peterson and Yongling Lu (2001), and Knowledge Across Cultures: A Contribution to Dialogue among Civilizations, co-edited with Julia Pan (2001).

R. D. HILL is honorary professor in the department of history at the University of Hong Kong where he concurrently holds a similar position in its department of ecology and biodiversity. He is well-known for his work on the geography of South-East Asia.

PETER HO is assistant professor at the Environmental Policy Group of Wageningen University. He has published numerous articles on green social movements and environmental conflict, institutional change, and rural development in China. He is co-editor of Rural Development in Transitional China (Journal of Peasant Studies, 2003, 30: 3/4). He is currently working on a monograph entitled "Institutions in transition: land ownership, property rights and social conflict." He served as the personal interpreter of Chinese for the Dutch minister of foreign affairs from 1997 until 2002.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0009443903000159 Published online by Cambridge University Press

CARSTEN A. HOLZ is associate professor in the Social Sciences Division at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. His research focuses on financial and macroeconomic issues in China, with a recent digression into Chinese statistics.

HSIN-HUANG MICHAEL HSIAO is a research fellow in the Institute of Sociology and director of the Asia-Pacific Research Program at Academia Sinica. He is also a professor of sociology at National Taiwan University.

JING HUANG received his PhD from Harvard University in 1994, and is an associate professor of political science at Utah State University. He is a Shorenstein fellow at Asia/Pacific Research Center, Stanford University for the 2002–2003 academic year.

CHANG-TAI HUNG is professor of humanities in the Division of Humanities at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology, and a historian specializing in modern Chinese cultural history.

FUNG KWAN teaches economics and co-ordinates the economics programme at the University of Macau. His research interests focus on development and rural economics in China, with an emphasis on labour issues.

KEVIN LATHAM is lecturer in social anthropology in the department of anthropology and sociology at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. His research focuses on Chinese theatre, popular culture, television and media in Guangdong and Hong Kong.

LAURENCE J. C. MA is an independent scholar and professor emeritus of geography at the University of Akron. He was a visiting professor of geography at the University of Hong Kong for the spring semester of 2002. He has published widely on China's urban development. His latest book, co-edited with Carolyn Cartier, is The Chinese Diaspora: Space, Place, Mobility and Identity (forthcoming).

ROMAN MALEK is professor of comparative religion at the Theological Faculty, St. Augustin, near Bonn. He is editor-in-chief of Monumenta Serica – Journal of Oriental Studies, and of China heute. Informationen über Religion und Christentum im chinesischen Kontext, and editor responsible for the Monumenta Serica Monograph Series, which researches and publishes on Chinese religions.

LUCIE OLIVOVA is an assistant professor in the Institute of East Asian Studies at Charles University, Prague.

YANG SU received his PhD in sociology at Stanford University in 2002, and teaches at the University of California, Irvine. His dissertation is a causal analysis of rural conflict during the Cultural Revolution in Guangdong, Guangxi and Hubei.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0009443903000159 Published online by Cambridge University Press

BRUCE TAYLOR is quality assurance co-ordinator at The Open University of Hong Kong. An urban planner by academic background and a former associate dean at the University of Macau, he maintains a research interest in the spatial consequences of rapid social and political change.

EDDY U received his PhD from the department of sociology at the University of California, Berkeley. He is currently junior research fellow at the Oriental Institute of the University of Oxford.

ANDREW G. WALDER is professor of sociology and senior fellow at the Institute for International Studies, Stanford University.

DAVID WALL teaches international economics and international politics in the University of Cambridge. He is a professorial research associate in the Centre of Chinese Studies at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, and an associate fellow in the Asia Programme at the Royal Institute of International Affairs. His current research focuses on the development of western China and on regional economic relations in North-East Asia.

BERNARD P. WONG is professor of anthropology and director for the Center for Urban Anthropology at San Francisco State University. He has conducted field research on the Chinese in the United States, Peru, Japan and the Philippines and has published extensively on the Chinese in New York, Lima, San Francisco and Silicon Valley. His theoretical interests include ethnic entrepreneurship, economic globalization and ethnic identity.

ZHOU YIXING is professor of urban geography at Beijing University. He has published numerous books and articles on China's urban population and urbanization in both Chinese and English. His most recent books in Chinese include A Study of Beijing's Suburbanization and Studies on Spatial Agglomeration and Dispersion in Coastal China's Dense Urban Regions (2000).

DAVID ZWEIG is a professor in the Division of Social Science, Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. He is author of Agrarian Radicalism in China, 1968–1981, Freeing China's Farmers, China's Brain Drain to the United States, and most recently Internationalizing China: Domestic Interests and Global Linkages. He is currently working with Stan Rosen on a book about returnees to China.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0009443903000159 Published online by Cambridge University Press