Contributors

BRIDIE ANDREWS MINEHAN teaches Chinese history and culture at Bentley College in Waltham, Mass. She is the author of The Making of Modern Chinese Medicine (forthcoming).

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London.

C. D. ALISON BAILEY is director of the Centre for Chinese Research, Institute of Asian Research, University of British Columbia. Her present research focuses on 17th-century Chinese legal thought and practice. She is guest editor of a forthcoming volume of Renditions on violence in Ming and Qing literature (November 2008).

JEAN-PHILIPPE BÉJA is a senior researcher at the CNRS and works at the Centre for International Research (CERI) in Paris. He is the former scientific director of the French Centre for Research on Contemporary China (CEFC) in Hong Kong. Trained as a Sinologist and political scientist, he works on the relation between the citizen and the state and on the emergence of civil society in the PRC. His latest book, A la recherche d'une ombre chinoise (Seuil, 2004), is a history of the pro-democracy movement in China.

YOMI BRAESTER is associate professor of comparative literature at the University of Washington in Seattle. His publications include Witness against History: Literature, Film, and Public Discourse in Twentieth-Century China (Stanford University Press, 2003), Painting the City Red: Film and Theater as Agents of Chinese Urban Policy, from 1949 to the Beijing Olympics (Duke University Press, forthcoming), and the co-edited volume (with James Tweedie) Cinema at the City's Edge: Film and Urban Space in East Asia (Hong Kong University Press, forthcoming).

DAVID D. BUCK is an emeritus professor of Chinese history at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. He edited the volume Recent Chinese Studies of the Boxer Movement (M.E. Sharpe, 1987).

JEAN-PIERRE CABESTAN is professor and head, department of government and international studies at Hong Kong Baptist University. He is also associate researcher at the Asia Centre, Paris. His recent publications include (with Benoît Vermander) La Chine en quête de ses frontières. La confrontation Chine–Taiwan (Presses des Science-po, 2005) translated and published in Chinese as a special issue of the journal Renlai (Taipei), January 2007.

YONGSHUN CAI teaches in the division of social science at Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. His current research focuses on contentious politics in China.

JOSEPH M. CHAN is professor in the school of journalism and communication at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. He also serves as the Changjiang Chair Professor in the school of journalism at Fudan University. His research interests include political communication, international communication and communication patterns in Chinese societies.

JIANFU CHEN is professor of Chinese law and legal globalization at the School of Law, La Trobe University, Melbourne, Australia. His latest publication is Chinese Law: Context and Transformation (Martinus Nijhoff Publications, 2008).

YINGHONG CHENG is associate professor of history at Delaware State University. His research interests include Maoism and world communism.

MATTHEW CLIFTON is a MPhil/PhD candidate at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, and also research manager at the New Local Government Network. He graduated from Exeter University with a degree in economics and politics with European study and has a master's degree in mass communications. He also won a Japanese government scholarship to study in Japan gaining an MA in International Relations at the Tokyo University of Foreign Studies.

© The China Quarterly, 2008 doi:10.1017/S0305741008000118

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000118 Published online by Cambridge University Press

GLORIA DAVIES teaches Chinese studies at Monash University. She publishes on contemporary Chinese thought, critical theory, modern Chinese history and culture, as well as on issues of globalization and social protection. She recently published Worrying about China (Harvard University Press, 2007).

HARRIET EVANS is professor of Chinese cultural studies at the Centre for the Study of Democracy, University of Westminster. Her publications include Women and Sexuality in China: Discourses of Female Sexuality and Gender since 1949 (Polity Press, 1997); Picturing Power in the People's Republic of China: Posters of the Cultural Revolution (co-edited with Stephanie Donald, Rowman and Littlefield, 1999), and The Subject of Gender: Daughters and Mothers in Urban China (Rowman and Littlefield, 2007). Her current research projects include an oral history of everyday life in "south Beijing" (Dashilanr), and an ethnographic study of Chinese perspectives on propaganda posters, in collaboration with Stephanie Hemelryk Donald (Posters of the Cultural Revolution: Contemporary Chinese Perspectives on an Era of Propaganda), funded by the Australian Research Council.

STEVEN M. GOLDSTEIN is Sophia Smith professor of government at Smith College, Northampton, MA, and an associate of the Asia Center, Harvard University.

CARSTEN A. HOLZ is associate professor in the social science division of the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology and currently visiting Princeton University. His research interests are the quality of Chinese statistics and economic development and growth in China.

J. BRUCE JACOBS is professor of Asian languages and studies at Monash University in Melbourne, Australia. He recently published on Lee Teng-hui in the June 2007 number of The China Quarterly.

SCOTT KENNEDY is an associate professor in the departments of East Asian languages and cultures and political science and the director of the Research Center for Chinese Politics and Business at Indiana University. He is the author of The Business of Lobbying in China (Harvard University Press, 2005). His current projects examine Chinese participation in international economic regimes and the evolution of corporate political activity in China.

FRANCIS L. F. LEE is an assistant professor at the department of English and communication, City University of Hong Kong. His research in the areas of political communication and public opinion studies have appeared in International Journal of Public Opinion Research, Harvard International Journal of Press/Politics, JMCQ, and Discourse & Society, among others.

LIANJIANG LI is a professor in the department of government and public administration at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. His work focuses on village elections and collective action in rural China. He is the author, with Kevin J. O'Brien, of Rightful Resistance in Rural China (Cambridge University Press, 2006).

SHI-YUNG LIU is assistant research fellow in the Institute of Taiwan History, Academia Sinica, Taiwan, and teaches at the Taipei Medical University. His research is focused on Japanese colonial medicine and epidemic condition in 19th–20th century southern China. He published "Differential Mortality in Colonial Taiwan" (Annales de démographie historique, 2004) and "Building a Strong and Healthy Empire: The critical period of building Japanese colonial medicine in Taiwan" (Japanese Studies, 2004).

STANLEY LUBMAN is currently lecturer in law at the School of Law of the University of California (Berkeley). He has been doing research and teaching on Chinese law at US and European law faculties for over 40 years, and from 1972 to 2004 was also active in law practice, advising foreign

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000118 Published online by Cambridge University Press

clients on business and disputes in China. His publications include Bird in a Cage: Legal Reform in China after Mao (Stanford University Press, 1999) and "Looking for Law in China" in the Columbia Journal of Chinese Law (2006). He is also an advisor to The Asia Foundation.

Ethan Michelson is assistant professor of sociology and East Asian languages and cultures at Indiana University-Bloomington. In addition to his work on social conflict in rural China, he is also completing a research project on Chinese lawyers.

Charles D. Musgrove received his PhD degree in history from the University of California at San Diego in 2002. He is currently assistant professor of history at St. Mary's College of Maryland, where he is revising a manuscript on architecture, ritual, and urban planning in Nanjing from 1927 to 1937.

Kevin J. O'Brien is Bedford professor of political science and chair of the Center for Chinese Studies at the University of California, Berkeley. His research focuses on theories of contentious politics and popular protest in rural China. He is the co-editor (with Neil J. Diamant and Stanley B. Lubman) of Engaging the Law in China: State, Society and Possibilities for Justice (Stanford University Press, 2005), co-author with Lianjiang Li of Rightful Resistance in Rural China (Cambridge University Press, 2006), and editor of a forthcoming volume called Popular Contention in China.

Benjamin Penny is fellow in Chinese history in the division of Pacific and Asian history, Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies at the Australian National University. He works on contemporary Chinese religious and spiritual movements, medieval Daoism and the writings of Protestant missionaries in 19th-century China.

Gaby Ramia is a senior lecturer and co-ordinator of the graduate programme in public policy at Monash University. He is co-author with Terry Carney of From Rights to Management: Contract, New Public Management and Employment Services (Kluwer, 2002). He has research interests in international social policy and governance; international education markets and student security; NGOs in international business and global governance.

Julia C. Strauss is senior lecturer in Chinese politics at the Department of Politics and International Studies, SOAS. Her research interests include: the evolution of the 20th-century Chinese state; the interaction between culture and institutions; comparative public administration, politics in Taiwan, and the implementation of environmental regulation in the PRC. She is the editor of The China Quarterly.

Edward Vickers is lecturer in comparative education at the Institute of Education, University of London. His publications include In Search of an Identity: The Politics of History as a School Subject in Hong Kong, 1960s–2005 and (with Alisa Jones) History Education and National Identity in East Asia (both published by Routledge). He has recently surveyed China's education system for a jointly authored report commissioned by the UK's Department for International Development – Education and Development in a Global Era: Strategies for "Successful" Globalisation.

Susanne Weigelin-Schwiedrzik is professor of Sinology at the department of East Asian studies at the University of Vienna. Her main field of research is modern Chinese history and historiography as well as Chinese politics. Recent publications focus on the re-writing of post-1949 history in the PRC and on state society relations.

Felix Wemheuer is assistant professor at the Institute for East Asian Studies/ Sinology at the University of Vienna. His new book Stone Noodles: Rural and Official Memories of the Great Leap Famine in the Chinese Province Henan has been published by Peter Lang. He studied politics of East Asia at the Ruhr University of Bochum (Germany) and the history of the Chinese Communist Party at Renmin University in Beijing.

Yang Kuisong is a former lecturer at Renmin University, researcher at the

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000118 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Chinese Academy of Social Sciences Institute of Modern History and professor at Beijing University. He is currently professor at East China Normal University. His research interests focus on the history of the Chinese Communist Party and the People's Republic.

RAY YEP is an associate professor in the department of public and social administration, City University of Hong Kong. He has published extensively on market reforms and rural development in China, and he is the author of Management Empowerment in China: Political Implications of Rural Industrialization in the Reform Era (RoutledgeCurzon, 2003). His current research project focuses on the colonial governance of Hong Kong.

YONGNIAN ZHENG is professor of Chinese politics and director of research in the School of Contemporary Chinese Studies, University of Nottingham.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008000118 Published online by Cambridge University Press