https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781413000030 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Contributors, April 2013 (12.2)

Julie Anderson is a senior lecturer at the University of Kent, where she specializes in the history of disability and medicine. Her recent publications include War, Disability and Rehabilitation in Britain: "Soul of A Nation" (2011) and with Emm Barnes and Emma Shackleton, The Art of Medicine (2012). She is completing a monograph on the history of blindness in Britain 1900–1950.

Michael J. Connolly is an associate professor of history at Purdue University North Central in Westville, Indiana. He serves as list editor for H-New England and co-edits the Praeger Series in American Political Culture. He is the author of Capitalism, Politics, and Railroads in Jacksonian New England (2003) and is writing a book on James Buchanan's administration.

Marie-Laure Crosnier Leconte is a curator and chef du patrimoine. She worked for the Musée d'Orsay from 1981 to 2005 and is presently a research associate at the Institut national d'histoire de l'art. An authority on the architectural education at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, a subject about which she has written extensively, she is compiling an online biographical dictionary of architecture students at the famed school. This database will eventually include 17,000 names from the Ecole's official inception in 1819 to its implosion in 1968. At present, 5,300 entries representing all nineteenth-century students can be consulted online through the INHA website: http://www.inha.fr/.

Isabelle Gournay associate professor of architecture at the University of Maryland, received a professional degree in architecture from the Ecole des Beaux-Arts and a doctorate in art history from Yale University. Publications such as her co-edited volume Paris on the Potomac: The French Influence on the Architecture and Art of Washington (2007) explore connections between urbanism, architecture, and housing in France and the United States. She has also written about the influence of the U.S. homebuilder Levitt in the Paris region.

Robert D. Miller received his PhD in history from the University of California, Riverside, in June 2011. He is an adjunct instructor at San Diego Mesa College and is researching American Indian conceptions of American empire—both overseas and domestically—at the turn of the twentieth century.

Ann Marie Nicolosi is an associate professor of history and women's and gender studies at the College of New Jersey. Her research focuses on the intersections of media and image in the suffrage movement in the 1910s and the feminist movement of the 1960s and 1970s.

Laura R. Prieto is a professor of history and women's and gender studies at Simmons College, Boston. She is the author of At Home in the Studio: The Professionalization of Women Artists (2001) and has written on abolitionist women sculptors for Women and Social Movements in the United States. She is completing a survey of Women in America: Issues and Controversies for Facts on File, as well as a book on American womanhood and imperialism during the era of the Spanish-American War.

Shannon Rose Riley is an associate professor of humanities at San José State University. She is co-editor of Mapping Landscapes for Performance as Research (2009) and is completing a manuscript titled Performing Race and Erasure: Cuba, Haiti, and U.S. Culture, 1898–1940.

David S. Tanenhaus is professor of history and chair of the History Department at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. He is the author of Juvenile Justice in the Making (2004) and The Constitutional Rights of Children: In re Gault and Juvenile Justice (2011).

Sharon Ullman is a professor of American history at Bryn Mawr College. She has written about early film and sexual culture in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Her recent research has been on Cold War American society.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781413000030 Published online by Cambridge University Press