The Journal of Laryngology and Otology
(Founded in 1887 by MORELL MACKENZIE and NORRIS WOLFENDEN)

January 1929

FOREWORD

THE issue of the present number of the Journal of Laryngology and Otology marks another milestone in its progress, and another page in its eventful history.

Since its commencement, in the year 1887, it has undergone many vicissitudes, and has had to struggle against difficulties known only to those who were at the helm.

For some years now, however, the Journal has been sailing in comparatively smooth waters, guided by able hands, and supported by an increasingly large and interested number of zealous workers and readers.

For its safe conduct, competent administration and increasing value as a means of disseminating special knowledge of diseases of the throat, nose and ear, the Directors and Shareholders are deeply indebted to the members of the Editorial Staff, and more particularly to Dr A. Logan Turner upon whose able shoulders the burden of publication has mainly rested.

In parting with these loyal and trusty friends and colleagues, the Directors, the members of the Editorial Committee and the subscribers to the Journal accord them a unanimous expression of thanks for their long service in the interests of the Journal given so generously and so enthusiastically.

VALE! VALE! VALE!

In looking to the future the Directors feel confident that the traditions of the Journal will be worthily maintained by those who are now taking office under the inspiring leadership of Mr Walter Howarth.

We feel sure that our readers will heartily co-operate with the new Editorial Staff and assist them by their contributions, literary and otherwise, in keeping the Journal in the front rank of British journalism, making it a credit alike to the producers and to the department of scientific medicine which it is its privilege to expound.

WILLIAM MILLIGAN.
