Acknowledgements

This book would not have been possible without the contributions of many extraordinary people, and it is a privilege to reflect on the individuals and institutions that made it possible.

Our journey began on a grey February day in 2022, in a hallway of Friedrich Alexander Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg (FAU Erlangen-Nürnberg), where discussions among PhD researchers culminated in the question: What does climate justice actually mean? Recognizing that the term was widely used but often vague, we sought to bring it to life with meaning and depth. This thirst for knowledge set in motion a learning journey that none of us could have foreseen. In hindsight, we are grateful for the naivety with which we approached the project – it might not have been possible otherwise.

Looking back now, we cherish the steep learning curve, the richness of conversations, and the inspiring encounters that far outweighed any challenges we had to face. We wish to thank our group of co-organizers – Marie Sophie Keller, Eklavya Vasudev, and Siddarth Peter de Souza – for bringing this project to life with their dedication and vision.

Fast forward to May 2023, when 24 brilliant people gathered in Nuremberg to reflect together on the meaning of 'climate justice in a globalized world'. Scholars and practitioners from around the globe dedicated their time and effort to engage in three days of critical discussion and collaboration. To all participants – thank you for your contributions to the discussions, your critical engagement, and your camaraderie, which form the groundwork of this project. Your work demonstrates the richness of thinking and activism surrounding climate justice, and your commitment to addressing these urgent issues has been a constant source of inspiration.

A special thanks goes to our colleague Sandra Ehard, whose tireless effort behind the scenes made this convening possible. Sandra, we could not have done it without you!

We are also grateful for the financial contributions from the Dr. German Schweiger Foundation, the Luise Prell Foundation, the Dr. Alfred Vinzl Foundation, the Elitenetzwerk Bayern, the German Research Foundation, Tilburg University, the Chair for Public Law and Public International Law of Prof. Dr. Markus Krajewski, and the Office of Equality and Diversity at FAU Erlangen-Nürnberg. Their generosity enabled this network of brilliant minds to convene and made this book a reality.

At the heart of this book are the post-convening reflections of ten authors (across seven chapters) to whom we are deeply grateful. Your insights and expertise have brought this book to life, and your commitment to the urgent challenges of climate justice has been truly inspiring. We thank you for your patience, your openness to countless emails, and your unwavering commitment to justice. Your ability to critically engage with feedback, your willingness to collaborate, and the depth of your insights have been invaluable to this project. Each chapter reflects not only your expertise, but also your passion for a more just and sustainable world.

The collaborative process of creating this volume was not without its challenges. Along the way, the project evolved, and from it emerged two distinct books, each addressing complementary aspects of climate justice. We are grateful to everyone involved for their continued dedication to advancing these critical conversations, and we celebrate the richness of perspectives that the two books offer together.

Special thanks also go to Prof. Dr Markus Krajewski, who patiently guided us through the editing and publishing process – a path that was uncharted territory for most of us. We are equally grateful to Cambridge University Press, especially Anwesha Rana and Koyena Roy, for their trust, guidance, and encouragement throughout the publication process.

On a personal note, we want to extend our heartfelt thanks to our families, friends, and colleagues for their encouragement and patience during the many hours of work this project required.

Funding from FAU Research Center for Human Rights Erlangen-Nürnberg (FAU CHREN) made it possible for this book to be published open access, making the digital version freely available for anyone to read and reuse under a Creative Commons licence.

Lastly, this book is dedicated to all those who are fighting for a more just and sustainable world. Your tireless fight against systemic injustices and your unwavering belief in a better future have inspired us to edit this book. We hope these pages contribute meaningfully to the ongoing struggles for climate justice.
