Contributors

Bluford Adams teaches in the English and American Studies departments at the University of Iowa. His book-in-progress is titled Old and New New Englanders: Immigration and Regional Identity in the Gilded Age.

Joe Creech is assistant director of the Lilly Fellows Program in Humanities and the Arts and adjunct assistant professor of history and humanities at Christ College, the honors college of Valparaiso University. He is author of Righteous Indignation: Religion and the Populist Revolution (2006).

Richard Wightman Fox is professor of history at the University of Southern California and author most recently of Jesus in America: Personal Savior, Cultural Hero, National Obsession (2004). He is writing Lincoln's Body, a study of the immediate aftermath of Lincoln's assassination.

Randal L. Hall is managing editor of the Journal of Southern History and adjunct associate professor of history at Rice University. He is the author of William Louis Poteat: A Leader of the Progressive-Era South (2000) and is researching economic development in southwestern Virginia.

Nancy A. Hardesty is professor of religion at Clemson University in South Carolina. Her books include Women Called to Witness: Evangelical Feminism in the Nineteenth Century (1984; rev. ed. 1999). Her current research project is a survey history of African American Christianity.

J. Michael Hogan is professor of rhetoric and co-director of the Center for Democratic Deliberation at Penn State University. His recent books include Woodrow Wilson's Western Tour: Rhetoric, Public Opinion, and the League of Nations (2006) and Rhetoric and Reform in the Progressive Era (2003).

Joseph Horowitz is most recently the author of Artists in Exile: How Refugees from Twentieth-Century War and Revolution Transformed the American Performing Arts (2008). Of his seven previous books, the award-winning Wagner Nights: An American History (1994) and Classical Music in America: A History (2005), propose a revisionist treatment of Gilded Age high culture. The present article on Henry Krehbiel condenses a chapter from his book-in-progress Moral Fire: Portraits from America's Fin-de-Siècle. His scholarly articles include "Music and the Gilded Age: Social Control and Sacralization Revisited," published in this journal in July 2004. As a concert producer and artistic administrator, he has served as executive director of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Orchestra; he is currently artistic director of the Post-Classical Ensemble in Washington. His website is josephhorowitz.com.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781400001110 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Michael Kazin teaches history at Georgetown University and is a member of the SHGAPE council. Besides his biography of William Jennings Bryan, he has written America Divided: The Civil War of the 1960s (with Maurice Isserman), The Populist Persuasion: An American History (1995); and Barons of Labor: The San Francisco Building Trades and Union Power in the Progressive Era (1987). He has also edited books about Americanism (with Joseph McMartin) and the current prospects of progressivism.

Michael F. Magliari is professor of history at California State University, Chico. His publications on American Populism include "Populist Historiography Post Hicks: Current Needs and Future Directions," Agricultural History 82 (Winter 2008); "What Happened to the Populist Vote? A California Case Study," Pacific Historical Review 64 (August 1995); and "Populism, Steamboats, and the Octopus: Transportation Rates and Monopoly in California's Wheat Regions, 1890–1896," Pacific Historical Review 58 (November 1989).

Christopher McKnight Nichols is a postdoctoral fellow at the University of Virginia's Institute for Advanced Studies in Culture. He co-edited, with Charles Mathewes, Prophesies of Godlessness: Predictions of America's Imminent Secularization from the Puritans to the Present (2008) and is the author of From Empire to Isolation: Internationalism and Isolationism in American Thought (forthcoming).

Walter Nugent, Tackes Professor of History emeritus at the University of Notre Dame and a past president of SHGAPE, is the author most recently of Habits of Empire: A History of American Expansion (2008). He has been writing about populism off and on since publishing The Tolerant Populists: Kansas Populism and Nativism in 1963.

Paul S. Sutter is associate professor of history at the University of Georgia and the author, most recently, of "Nature's Agents or Agents of Empire? Entomological Workers and Environmental Change during the Construction of the Panama Canal," Isis 98 (December 2007).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781400001110 Published online by Cambridge University Press