Contributors

Karen Ahlquist is an associate professor of music and department chair at George Washington University in Washington, DC, where she teaches music history. She is the author of Democracy at the Opera: Music, Theater, and Culture in New York City, 1815–60 (1997) and editor of Chorus and Community (2006), a collection of essays on choruses and choral music. Professor Ahlquist's articles and reviews have appeared in the Journal of American History, the New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, the Journal of the American Musicological Society, Women and Music, and other publications. Her research interests include social and cultural issues related to nineteenth-century vocal music, music institutions, music and American immigration, musicians' education, and music historiography.

Douglas Firth Anderson is professor of history at Northwestern College in Orange City, Iowa. His primary research focus has been religion in the trans-Mississippi West during the Gilded Age and Progressive Era. His previous articles have won the Woodrow Wilson Award of the Presbyterian Historical Society and the Arrington-Prucha Award of the Western Historical Association. His webpage is http://home.nwciowa.edu/firth and his email firth@nwciowa.edu.

Jørn Brøndal is associate professor of history and director of studies at the Center for American Studies, University of Southern Denmark. A member of this journal's editorial board, he is the author of Ethnic Leadership and Midwestern Politics: Scandinavian Americans and the Progressive Movement of Wisconsin, 1890–1914 (2004) and is working on a book on Scandinavian travel writers in the United States in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

James T. Carroll is professor of history at Iona College in New Rochelle, N.Y., and the author of Seeds of Faith: Catholic Indian Boarding Schools (2000).

Lynne Marie Getz, professor of history at Appalachian State University, is the author of Schools of Their Own: The Education of Hispanos in New Mexico, 1850-1940 (1996); "Lost Momentum: The Impact of World War II on Educational Progress for Hispanos in New Mexico*" in Mexican Americans and World War II,* ed. Maggie Rivas-Rodriguez (2005); and "Partners in Motion: Gender, Migration, and Reform in Antebellum Kansas and Ohio" in Frontiers: A Journal of Women's Studies (2006). Her current research project is a study of families, migration, and memory in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781400003893 Published online by Cambridge University Press

J. Vincent Lowery is an assistant professor of humanistic studies and history at the University of Wisconsin–Green Bay. His current manuscript is tentatively entitled "Reconstructing the Reign of Terror: Popular Representations of the Ku Klux Klan."

Ronald J. Pestritto holds the Charles and Lucia Shipley Chair in the American Constitution at Hillsdale College. His books include Woodrow Wilson and the Origins of Modern Liberalism (2005).

Judith R. Raftery is professor of history at California State University, Chico. Her publications include Land of Fair Promise: Politics and Reform in Los Angeles Schools, 1881–1941 (1992); "Gender and Politics in Los Angeles: Caroline S. Severance" in The Human Condition in California, ed. Clark Davis and David Igler (2002); and "Missing the Mark: Intelligence Testing in Los Angeles Public Schools" in Urban Education in the United States: A Historical Reader, ed. John Rury (2005). She is currently completing a book manuscript, "American Nation Building in the Philippines: Education, Gender, and Race."

David Sellers Smith will receive his PhD in June 2010 from Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois. For his dissertation work on the Credit Men, he received a fellowship from the Dolores Zohrab Liebmann Foundation and research grants from Harvard University and the Gilder Lehrman Institute of American History. While at Northwestern, he also received two teaching awards.

Camilla Stivers is distinguished professor emerita at the Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs, Cleveland State University. Her works include Bureau Men, Settlement Women: Constructing Public Administration in the Progressive Era (2002).

Eileen H. Tamura is a historian and professor of education at the College of Education, University of Hawaii. Her works include Americanization, Acculturation, and Ethnic Identity: The Nisei Generation in Hawaii (1994); "African American Vernacular English & Hawai'i Creole English: A Comparison of Two School Board Controversies," Journal of Negro Education (2002); and an edited book, The History of Discrimination in U.S. Education: Marginality, Agency, and Power (2008).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781400003893 Published online by Cambridge University Press