https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781410000101 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Contributors, January 2011 (10.1)

James H. Adams is a history lecturer at Pennsylvania State University–Abington and at Rowan University. His article, "The Negotiated Hibernian: Discourse on the Fenian in England and America," recently appeared in American Nineteenth Century History. He is revising a manuscript that examines the cultural, social, political, and legal intersections of anti-vice discourse in Philadelphia 1880–1940.

Jack S. Blocker is professor of history emeritus at Huron University College and adjunct research professor at the University of Western Ontario, as well as the immediate past president of SHGAPE. He is the author or editor of six books on drinking and temperance reform, the most recent of which is Alcohol and Temperance in Modern History: An International Encyclopedia (2003), co-edited with David Fahey and Ian Tyrrell. His latest book is A Little More Freedom: African Americans Enter the Urban Midwest, 1860–1930 (2008). His essay is a revision of his presidential address to SHGAPE, delivered in April 2010.

Cornelius L. Bynum is an assistant professor of history at Purdue University. His research investigates progressive thought and movements among African Americans, focusing on independent strains of black radicalism in the early twentieth century. He teaches African American history, labor history, and the civil rights movement.

Alison Clark Efford is an assistant professor of history at Marquette University. She is the author of recent essays in the Missouri Historical Review and the Bulletin of the German Historical Institute and is completing a book on German immigrants' role in redefining American citizenship following the Civil War.

Maureen A. Flanagan is a professor of history and chair of the Department of Humanities at the Illinois Institute of Technology. A specialist in the Gilded Age and Progressive Era as well as urban history, she is currently president of SHGAPE. Her most recent book is America Reformed: Progressives and Progressivisms, 1890s–1920s (2007). She is working on a manuscript tentatively titled Constructing the Patriarchal City: Gender and the Built Environments of Chicago, Dublin, London, and Toronto, 1870s–1940s.

William W. Giffin is a professor of history at Indiana State University, Terre Haute, where he teaches race and nationality among other subjects. His major book is African Americans and the Color Line in Ohio, 1915–1930 (2005).

Brian M. Ingrassia is visiting lecturer in the Department of History at Georgia State University in Atlanta. Since completing his PhD at the University of Illinois at Urbana—Champaign, he has been preparing a book manuscript on the intellectual bases of Progressive Era intercollegiate football reform and the origins of the American ivory tower.

Richard Bach Jensen, professor of history in the Louisiana Scholars' College, Northwestern State University, is the author of a half-dozen articles and book chapters on anarchist terrorism in Europe, the United States, and Argentina. He is completing a book manuscript entitled The International Campaign against Anarchist Terrorism, 1880–1914.

Matthew Oyos teaches history at Radford University. He has published several articles and book chapters about Theodore Roosevelt and is currently working on a study of Roosevelt and the American military.

Aviva F. Taubenfeld is an assistant professor of literature at Purchase College, SUNY. She is the author of Rough Writing: Ethnic Authorship in Theodore Roosevelt's America (2008).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781410000101 Published online by Cambridge University Press