SHEA/ESGNI Training Course

In November 1999, 60 medical doctors and ICPs from 14 European countries came to The Netherlands for the first SHEA/ESGNI (European Study Group of Nosocomial Infections) course in hospital epidemiology. The course was based on the successful SHEA/CDC course, but was adapted for Europe and enlarged to include topics such as molecular typing. Among the US and European trainers (all SHEA members) were SHEA's and ESGNI's presidents, John Boyce and Emilio Bouza. In general, the course was rated as excellent and certainly achieved its primary goal, to give high-quality training at a reasonable price, without losing (or gaining) money. The next European course will be held in Geneva, Switzerland, in August 2000. Info: didier.pittet@hcuge.ch.

Search for US Co-editor

From the SHEA News editor: Some readers may have noticed that SHEA News, as well as the SHEA Newsletter, has quite a European touch. To be honest, the "touch" is more European than planned. When taking over from Dr. Batt, I assumed that receiving information would not be a problem, despite being located in Europe, since we are all connected by the World Wide Web. It would seem, however, that there still is no substitute for having an old-fashioned "local affiliate" who can help ensure that news items are rounded up and sent through that modern connection. Is there a colleague in North America who would join us in this endeavor, for the modest glory of being named as a co-editor of SHEA News and the SHEA Newsletter? Infections From Endoscopes

An FDA and CDC Public Health Advisory reports several incidents in which patients developed serious infections after being examined with bronchoscopes that apparently were inadequately reprocessed in an automated endoscope reprocessor.

Further information on this problem, and the FDA and CDC recommendations that may help to reduce future incidents, can be found at http://www.fda.gov/cdrh/safety/endoreprocess.html.
