Journal of East Asian Studies 11 (2011), 515–516

The Contributors

Regina Abrami is a senior fellow, Asia Business and Globalization, Harvard Business School. She is also on the executive committee of Harvard University's Fairbank Center for Chinese Studies and a faculty associate of the Weatherhead Center for International Affairs. Her research focuses on the political economy of government-business relations in emerging markets. She earned her PhD in political science from the University of California, Berkeley.

William Hurst is assistant professor of political science at the University of Toronto. He was previously assistant professor at the University of Texas (2007–2011) and a postdoctoral fellow at the University of Oxford (2005–2007), after earning his PhD at the University of California, Berkeley. His prior research has concentrated on Chinese labor politics, while his current work focuses on the politics of legal institutions in China and Indonesia.

Jonathan Kinkel is a PhD student at the University of Texas at Austin where he has completed qualifying exams in public law and comparative politics. Broadly, his research focuses on law and development in the People's Republic of China. He previously earned a JD (2005) from Wisconsin Law School and served three years (2005–2008) as an assistant attorney general at the Wisconsin Department of Justice.

Jih-wen Lin is a research fellow at the Institute of Political Science at Academia Sinica, Taiwan, and professor of political science at National Chengchi University. He received his PhD in political science from the University of California, Los Angles (1996). His research interests include formal modeling and comparative institutional design, and he has had articles published in Party Politics, Journal of Democracy, Electoral Studies, China Quarterly, and Journal of East Asian Studies, among others.

Thomas B. Pepinsky is assistant professor of government and associate director of the Cornell Modern Indonesia Project at Cornell University. He is the author of Economic Crises and the Breakdown of Authoritarian Regimes (2009) and of articles appearing in the American Journal of Political Science, Studies in Comparative International Development, World

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1598240800007475 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Politics, and other journals. His current research examines Islam, the economy, and voter preferences in democratic Indonesia.

Victor Shih is associate professor of political science at Northwestern University specializing in China. An immigrant to the United States from Hong Kong, Shih received his doctorate in government from Harvard University. He is the author of a book published by Cambridge University Press, Factions and Finance in China: Elite Conflict and Inflation. He is also the author of numerous articles appearing in academic and business journals, including China Quarterly, Comparative Political Studies, Asian Wall Street Journal, and Far Eastern Economic Review, and is a frequent adviser to the private sector on the banking industry in China. His current research concerns elite political dynamics and local government debt in China.

Maria M. Wihardja is a research fellow at the Centre for Strategic and International Studies and a lecturer at the University of Indonesia. She has published in the Bulletin of Indonesian Economic Studies, Economics and Finance in Indonesia, and the Journal of Economic Development. She was a rapporteur for KOPEC-INCPEC-ANU Asia G20 roundtables in November 2009 and October 2010. Her main research interests are institutions in developing countries and East Asian regionalism.

Yu Zheng is assistant professor of political science at the University of Connecticut. He received his PhD degree from the University of California, San Diego, and a postdoctoral fellowship from Princeton-Harvard China and the World Program. His research focuses on political institutions and foreign direct investment in developing countries. His work has appeared in Comparative Politics, Public Opinion Quarterly, International Interactions, and Journal of Contemporary China.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1598240800007475 Published online by Cambridge University Press