Announcing a Long Awaited and Much Needed Work . . .

PSYCHOANALYSIS, PSYCHIATRY, AND LAW

by Jay Katz and Joseph Goldstein, both of Yale University, and Alan M. Dershowitz, Harvard University

Psychoanalysis, Psychiatry, and Law is a new effort by lawyers and psychoanalysts to achieve understanding by studying and challenging the experiences, assumptions, and knowledge of their different disciplines. It is essentially two books in one volume. The first, "Psychoanalysis and Law," presents a detailed study of psychoanalytic theory and explores its relevance to a wide variety of fundamental legal issues. The second, "Law and Psychiatry," returns the lawyer to his more familiar role as a participant in a particular legal process: the process of invocation, administration, and appraisal of mental health laws. For students, scholars, and practitioners in the fields of law, psychoanalysis, psychiatry, mental health administration, and the social sciences, the authors have incorporated hundreds of pertinent references drawn from trial transcripts, appellate decisions, legislative records, and the literature of law and psychoanalysis.

Two Earlier Works of Outstanding Merit . . .

THE FAMILY AND THE LAW

Problems for Decision in the Family Law Process by Joseph Goldstein and Jay Katz, both of Yale University

". . . every reader of this enormously important document will recognize and appreciate the manner in which the authors have illustrated the complexity of the . . . profound drives which lead a husband or a wife to the agonizing decision that a divorce is the least unsatisfactory resolution of marital discord. . . ."

CRIMINAL LAW

Problems for Decision in the Promulgation, Invocation and Administration of a Law of Crimes by Richard C. Donnelly and Joseph Goldstein, both of Yale University, and Richard D. Schwartz, Northwestern University

"An exciting and imaginative treatment of the current dilemmas that face our courts . . . provides the ferment so badly needed to stimulate interest in the criminal law and make its teaching more attractive."
