https://doi.org/10.1017/S153778141100020X Published online by Cambridge University Press

Contributors, July 2011 (10.3)

Ellen L. Berg is an affiliate assistant professor of history at the University of Maryland. Her book-in-progress has the working title "Citizens in the 'Republic of Childhood': Immigrants and the American Kindergarten, 1860–1925."

Jørn Brøndal is an associate professor of American history at the University of Southern Denmark and president of the Danish Association for American Studies. His book, Ethnic Leadership and Midwestern Politics: Scandinavian Americans and the Progressive Movement in Wisconsin, 1890–1914 (2004), earned him a Wisconsin Historical Society Book Award of Merit.

Glen Gendzel, associate professor of history at San Jose State University, is a graduate of the University of California and the University of Wisconsin. He has published on subjects ranging from California mythology, politics, and migration to the baseball business, progressivism, and McCarthyism. He has also taught at five universities in five states.

Julia F. Irwin is an assistant professor of history at the University of South Florida. Her first book, Making the World Safe: The American Red Cross and America's Humanitarian Awakening (forthcoming 2013), examines the politics and culture of Progressive Era foreign aid. Her article in the July 2009 issue (9.3) on the Red Cross in Italy during World War I won SHGAPE's biennial prize for the best article in this journal.

Ross A. Kennedy is an associate professor at Illinois State University. Author of The Will to Believe: Woodrow Wilson, World War I, and America's Strategy for Peace and Security (2009), he is editing A Companion to Woodrow Wilson for Wiley-Blackwell.

Bruce Miroff is a professor of political science and Collins fellow at the State University of New York, Albany. His most recent book is The Liberals' Moment: The McGovern Insurgency and the Identity Crisis of the Democratic Party (2007).

David Monod teaches American cultural history at Wilfrid Laurier University in Canada. His most recent monograph is Settling Scores: German Music, Denazification, and the Americans, 1945–1953 (2005). He is currently writing a book on the American variety theater in the late nineteenth century.

Christopher McKnight Nichols is an Andrew W. Mellon postdoctoral fellow in U.S. history at the University of Pennsylvania. He coedited, with Charles Mathewes, Prophesies of Godlessness: Predictions of America's Imminent Secularization from the Puritans to the Present (2008). Author of Promise and Peril: America at the Dawn of a Global Age (2011), he is associate editor of the forthcoming Oxford Encyclopedia of American Military and Diplomatic History.

Matthew Rothschild is the editor and publisher of The Progressive magazine and editor of Democracy in Print: The Best of The Progressive Magazine, 1909–2009, published for the magazine's centennial by the University of Wisconsin Press.

Brent Ruswick earned his PhD in the history of science at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. His essay in this journal draws on his forthcoming book, Almost Worthy: The Poor, the Paupers, and the Science of Charity in America (2011). Presently, he is a visiting assistant professor at the University of Central Arkansas.

Nancy C. Unger is an associate professor of history at Santa Clara University and review editor of this journal. Her prize-winning book, Fighting Bob La Follette: The Righteous Reformer, was released in an updated paperback edition in 2008. Her current book project is "Beyond 'Nature's Housekeepers': American Women in Environmental History" for Oxford University Press. She writes for the History News Service and FightingBob.com.

Andy Urban is an ACLS new faculty fellow in the American studies and history departments at Rutgers University. His book-in-progress examines Irish and Chinese servants in the late nineteenth century, revealing how cultural attitudes about domestic labor informed debates on immigration policy.

Kevin Walker recently received his PhD from Claremont Graduate University in Claremont, California. A visiting instructor at Emmanuel College in Boston, he is revising for publication his dissertation, a study of the constitutional justifications for state regulatory laws before the Taft Court and the origins of economic substantive due process in constitutional law.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S153778141100020X Published online by Cambridge University Press