About the Contributors

Lívia Regina Batista-Pritchard is a lecturer in Sustainable Management in Sustainable Futures (Department of Management), University of Exeter Business School, Penryn. She is a graduate in Law and holds an MSc and a PhD in Environmental and Climate Change Law from the Universidade de São Paulo. She is currently a member of the Exeter Centre for Environmental Law and the programme co-director (liaison) of the Bachelor of Business and Laws (BBL) and Law with Business (LLB) at University of Exeter, Cornwall. Her research interests revolve around climate and environmental justice, intersectional environmentalism, sustainable governance, and transformative social innovations. Through her work, she aims to critically examine the legal and systemic frameworks that perpetuate inequality and environmental exploitation on a global scale.

Laura Duarte Reyes is a senior legal advisor at the European Center for Constitutional and Human Rights (ECCHR). She is a Colombian lawyer specialized in corporate accountability, human rights, and climate justice. She studied law at the Pontificia Universidad Javeriana in Bogotá, Colombia, as well as human rights and multilevel governance at the Università degli Studi di Padova, Italy. During her studies, she worked in strategic litigation and in support of the Colombian peace process (MAPP-OAS). After that, she was legal advisor for the implementation of public policies and public–private partnerships and provided legal support to human rights organizations in the field of women's rights in India, Colombia, and Italy.

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 02:11:18, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/9781009631327

Fahmi Rizki Fahroji is an Indonesian born-and-raised science and technology studies scholar and anthropologist in training. He is currently pursuing a PhD in the Science and Technology Studies programme at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, New York. He acquired a BA in Cultural Anthropology from Universitas Gadjah Mada, Yogyakarta, in 2020 and an MRes in Human Geography from the University of Glasgow in 2023. His current study focuses on the intersection of energy futures, STS underground, and political ecology. The trajectory of his research is to engage with ethnography to speak about issues of energy transition, the politics of earth sciences, and environmental humanities, with Indonesia and Southeast Asia as his region of expertise.

Jorge Andres Forero-González is an expert in human rights, peacebuilding, indigenous communities, climate change, and rural development in Latin America. He currently works as a consultant for various governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in Colombia. With a background in Economics (BA) and Political Science (MA), as well as being a Fulbright Humphrey fellow, he integrates academic perspectives into his work with young people, indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities, and campesinos (organized farmers). He is a member of the indigenous Muiska community.

Mirka Fries holds an LLB in German Law and International Law from the University of Münster and the University of Potsdam, and an LLM in International Criminal Law and Human Rights from the University of Amsterdam and Columbia Law School, New York. She gained her first professional experience at the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court and with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in Argentina and Uganda. She later worked as a legal advisor and Bertha Justice fellow at the European Center for Constitutional and Human Rights (ECCHR) in Berlin. Since November 2021, she has been a researcher in the international doctoral programme Business and Human Rights at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg (FAU Erlangen-Nürnberg), where her research focuses on the intersection of seed patents, transnational corporations, and critical theory. Her broader academic interests include international law and corporate practice, critical legal studies, and feminist theory. Since January 2023, she also lectures in the Law Group at Wageningen University.

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 02:11:18, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/9781009631327

Katya Regina Isaguirre-Torres is post-doctorate in Law from the Pontifical Catholic University of Paraná. She has a PhD in Environment and Development from the Federal University of Paraná (UFPR) and a master's degree in Business Law and Citizenship from the Curitiba University Center. She is a professor of Environmental and Agrarian Law in the Legal Sciences department of UFPR and also a professor in the Postgraduate Law programme at the same university. In addition, she is a collaborating researcher in the Socioeconomics, Environment and Development (SEED) unit of the Department of Management and Environmental Sciences, University of Liège, Arlon Campus, Belgium, and a coordinator at EKOA, a research and extension centre in socio-environmental law. Her research areas are human rights and democracy, and her areas of interest include climate emergency, environmental conflicts, rights of nature, agroecology, food security, and sovereignty.

Kelsey Jost-Creegan is the deputy director and a lecturer in Law at Columbia Law School Human Rights Clinic, where she leads the Land, Sovereignty, and Environmental Defence Project. Previously, she worked at EarthRights International on corporate accountability cases, including Doe v. Chiquita Brands International, and developed strategies to support land and environmental defenders. She also contributed to Mamani v. Sánchez de Lozada and Sánchez Berzaín, the first civil jury trial in the United States against a former head of state. Her advocacy focuses on corporate accountability, state violence, and the rights of ethnic and campesino communities, with a strong interest in participatory methodologies. Her research examines the political ecology of extractive enclaves in Latin America and the root causes of violence against land and environmental defenders. She holds a BA degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and a JD from Harvard Law School, and is fluent in Spanish, with working proficiency in Portuguese and French.

Tchenna Maso holds a PhD in Law from the Federal University of Paraná (UFPR) in the area of human rights and democracy and a master's degree in Contemporary Integration of Latin America (ICAL) from the Federal University of Latin American Integration, Foz do Iguaçu. She also has a specialist degree in Energy in Contemporary Capitalism from the Federal University of Rio De Janeiro (UFRJ). She graduated in Law from UFPR in 2013. She researches socio-environmental conflicts involving transnational companies, with a focus on the mining sector, and also develops studies in the area of climate, peasant rights, and participatory research with women. In addition, she is a researcher with the EKOA group, a centre for research and extension in socio-environmental law (UFPR).

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 02:11:18, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/9781009631327

Manele Mpofu is a social justice lawyer and policy advocate based in Harare, Zimbabwe. He has an LLB.S degree from the University of Zimbabwe. His work centres on advancing the rights of marginalized communities, particularly in the context of natural resource extraction and climate change. Through legal empowerment and advocacy, he challenges structural inequality and promotes accountability from both state and corporate actors. He plays a key role in shaping just and inclusive approaches to natural resource governance, energy policy, and climate finance, ensuring that communities are not left behind in the transition to low-carbon economies. Beyond Zimbabwe, he contributes to regional and global conversations on climate justice, business and human rights, and responsible investment. He has shared insights at platforms such as the United Nations Forum on Business and Human Rights, where he engaged on environmental, social, and governance (ESG) standards and corporate accountability in the Global South.

Jakob Nehls holds a bachelor's degree in Geography from the Georg-August-Universität Göttingen and a master's degree in Human Rights and Politics from the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE). During his studies, an international exchange program took him to Cameroon, where he worked on environmental protection and climate change adaptation. In Indonesia, he investigated the sociopolitical impacts of environmentally induced migration. After completing his studies, he gained further experience in climate-induced migration at the German Corporation for International Cooperation (GIZ). He has also been involved with various organizations advocating for human rights and intergenerational justice. At Amnesty International in Germany, he contributed to building the organization's climate-related human rights work. He hosts a podcast on the climate crisis and children's rights for SOS Children's Villages. As a doctoral researcher, he explores the theoretical foundations of human rights indivisibility and its links to business and human rights discourse.

Diana Peña-García is a researcher and non-formal educator specializing in food systems, agroecology, and extractivism in Latin America. She has led international projects, including studies on climate justice and gender relations in agribusiness, collaborating closely with rural communities across the region. She holds a degree in Economics and a PhD in Geography, with a proven track record of integrating research into practical recommendations that drive policy change and promote more socially and environmentally just societies. In recent years, she has contributed to high-impact evaluations for organizations such as Plan International and Habitat for Humanity.

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 02:11:18, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/9781009631327

Silvia Rojas-Castro is a senior legal advisor at the European Center for Constitutional and Human Rights (ECCHR) in Berlin. She was also a south–north expert at the EECHR and the Centro de Estudios Legales y Sociales (CELS) in Argentina. She studied law at the National University of Colombia (Colombia) and public economics, law, and politics at the Leuphana University of Lüneburg (Germany). In Colombia, she worked on strategic litigation, women's rights, and sexual violence in the Colombian conflict for the human rights organization Dejusticia. Before joining ECCHR, she worked at the German Institute for Global and Area Studies (GIGA) in Hamburg and Polis180 in Berlin.

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 02:11:18, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/9781009631327