ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The debts I have amassed in the production of this monograph are too vast to be given full notice here. Nevertheless many acts of generosity have been so great as to deserve special notice.

David Lagomarsino communicated his enthusiasm for history to me as an undergraduate and encouraged me to forego the temptations of a career in the law to attend graduate school in history. David Lagomarsino and the history and classics faculties at Dartmouth demonstrated to me the possibilities of combining first-rate scholarship with outstanding teaching.

Graduate school, extended research in England, and the opportunity to revise this manuscript were made possible by the generosity of the Mellon Fellowships in the Humanities, the Lord Harlech Trust, the Honda American Foundation, and the Harvard Society of Fellows.

The idea for this book arose from a paper produced for the seminar on Early Modern State and Society directed by John Brewer and Simon Schama, whose stimulating ideas, I hope, have significantly affected the finished product. Over the years Simon Schama has reminded me of the centrality of the Netherlands in early modern Europe, and made sure that I thought about the popular dimension of my project. John Clive taught me to look at my sources with a sense of humor, and to remember the importance of political culture in trying to understand politics.

My extended stay in Oxford convinced me of the vital importance of intellectual community in producing historical scholarship. Blair Worden, through his evening seminars and his own enthusiasm and generosity, made Oxford a wonderful place for an American to become acquainted with seventeenth-century English history. Toby Barnard went far beyond the call of duty in acting as my Oxford supervisor, listening patiently to my incoherent and often crazy ideas. He unfailingly pointed me in fruitful directions, carefully read and commented upon every poorly written and badly organized draft chapter. Perhaps most importantly, Toby Barnard constantly reassured me that this was a project worth undertaking.

I have benefited immensely from discussions with Sharon Achinstein, Bernard Bailyn, Jim Bjork, David Bush, Tony Claydon, Lee Davison,

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 02:42:19, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/CBO9780511560781

Margot Finn, Adam Fox, Mark Goldie, Lije Gould, Tim Harris, Derek Hirst, Alan Houston, Mark Knights, Peter Le Fevre, Jim Livesey, Clair McEachern, John Miller, Peter Miller, Bill Novak, Nelly Oliensis, Cathy Patterson, Jenny Paxton, Katherine Penovich, Ben Polak, John Robertson, Craig Rose, Henry Roseveare, Paul Seaward, Nigel Smith, John Spurr, Nicholas von Maltzahn and Rachel Weil. The comments and criticisms of papers I read in Dr. Worden's seminar at Oxford, the Thursday Seventeenth Century seminar at the Institute of Historical Research, the Stuart seminar at Selwyn College, Cambridge, the 1660–1832 Colloquium held at Newcastle in 1989, and at the British History Colloquium at Harvard have done much to shape the finished product. I am greatly indebted to Sharon Achinstein, Kenny Bamberger, Jeremy Black, David Bush, Bernard Capp, Tom Cogswell, Ranu Dayal, Margot Finn, Lisa Freinkel, Tim Harris, Steve Maughan, Claire McEachern, Bill Novak, Cathy Patterson, Jen Poulos, John Robertson, Lynn Sanders, Simon Schama, Kevin Sharpe, Nick Souleles, John Spurr, Richard Strier, Nicholas von Maltzahn and Blair Worden for reading, criticising, and making suggestions on various sections of this book. My research assistant Jim Bjork has been indispensable in the final stages of production.

At different times I received much support and encouragement, as well as much prodding, from some very special people. My parents, though sometimes perplexed as to what I was doing, were invariably supportive and always quick to ask when the book would finally be done. Jen Poulos provided me with much warmth, support, and editorial assistance, never losing interest in the project or its author. Sharon Achinstein quickly made me feel at home in Chicago, provided me with much caring, support, and encouragement during those difficult last phases of manuscript production, and taught me many important things about the seventeenth century and much much more.

My final debt is my largest. Wallace MacCaffrey has been a kind, generous, and exacting supervisor. He not only kept up my spirits over the long haul, but also provided encouragement and critical advice at precisely the right moments. He has been for me, and for a whole generation of Harvard students, a model scholar and teacher.

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 02:42:19, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/CBO9780511560781