https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781412000333 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Contributors, July 2012 (11.3)

Thomas Adam is a professor at the University of Texas at Arlington where he teaches German and modern transatlantic history. His recent publications include Buying Respectability: Philanthropy and Urban Society in Transnational Perspective, 1840s to 1930s (2009) and a textbook on transnational history, Intercultural Transfer and the Making of the Modern World, 1800–2000 (2011).

Omar H. Ali is an associate professor of African American and Diaspora studies at the University of North Carolina, Greensboro. He is the author of In the Balance of Power: Independent Black Politics and Third Party Movements in the United States (2008) and In the Lion's Mouth: Black Populism in the New South, 1886–1900 (2010).

Wendy Gamber is a professor of history at Indiana University, Bloomington. She is the author of The Female Economy: The Millinery and Dressmaking Trades, 1860–1930 (1997) and The Boardinghouse in Nineteenth-Century America (2007). She is currently completing a book with the tentative title, "The Notorious Mrs. Clem: Crime and Culture in the Gilded Age."

Melanie Gustafson is an associate professor of history at the University of Vermont. She is the author of Women and the Republican Party, 1854–1924 (2001) and of the American Historical Association's Becoming a Historian: A Survival Manual (2003). Editor as well of three books, she served in 2010–11 as president of the New England Historical Association. A board member of Clio: Visualizing History, she is working on an upcoming exhibit, Women Making History. Her article on Harriet Hubbard Ayer in this issue grew from teaching interests that led her to investigate and evaluate how historians recreate past lives and past worlds and the relationship of historical analysis to storytelling.

Melissa R. Klapper is an associate professor of history at Rowan University in Glassboro, New Jersey. She is the author of Jewish Girls Coming of Age in America, 1860–1920 (2005) and Small Strangers: The Experiences of Immigrant Children in the United States, 1880–1925 (2007). She is writing a book on American Jewish women in the suffrage, birth control, and peace movements before World War II.

Adam Laats is an assistant professor of education and history at Binghamton University (SUNY), where he also directs the Center for the Teaching of American History. He is the author of Fundamentalism and Education in the Scopes Era: God, Darwin, and the Roots of America's Culture Wars (2010).

John David Smith is the Charles H. Stone Distinguished Professor of American History at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. His books include An Old Creed for the New South: Proslavery Ideology and Historiography, 1865–1918, third edition (2008) and Black Judas: William Hannibal Thomas and "The American Negro," reprint edition (2002). With Patrica B. Bixel, he co-authored Seeing the New South: Race and Place in the Photographs of Ulrich B. Phillips, forthcoming in 2012.

Samuel J. Thomas is professor emeritus at Michigan State University in East Lansing, Michigan. Among his publications are several articles that focus on political cartoons as primary sources and texts. He has also taught the critical analysis of Gilded Age cartoons and, in 2008, curated an exhibition on them at the MSU Museum of History and Culture.

Amy Louise Wood is an associate professor of history at Illinois State University. She is the author of Lynching and Spectacle: Witnessing Racial Violence in America, 1890–1940 (2009) and editor of the volume on violence for the New Encyclopedia of Southern Culture (2011). She is currently working on a book about crime and compassion at the turn of the last century.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781412000333 Published online by Cambridge University Press