The idea of this book came out of a faculty discussion at the Centre for the Study of Developing Societies, Delhi, a couple of years ago. We debated how, as academics, we can and should approach historic occasions such as 75 years of India's independence and 75 years of India's constitution. Opinions varied. Some of us felt that a project on the contested history and evolution of the humanities and social science disciplines in postcolonial India might be a worthwhile contribution to make. Intended as a self-reflexive exercise, this project offers a counter-position to the high nationalist and statist rhetoric that tends to take over the public sphere in such moments of national commemoration. We thank our colleagues for allowing the core idea of the book to emerge through debate and disagreement, encouraging us to explore how the nation, as a political concept and form, has worked simultaneously as a site for and object of critical reflection in the Indian academy. We are also grateful to each of the contributors to this volume for their hard work, intellectual open-endedness, and incredible patience.

A special word of thanks is due to International Centre of Advanced Studies 'Metamorphoses of the Political' (ICAS:MP)—the Centre of Advanced Studies located in India and funded by the German Ministry of Research, Technology and Space (BMFTR) as one of their Maria Sibylla Merian Centres. Our book is part of ICAS:MP's thematic focus on the 'Metamorphoses of the Political in the Long Twentieth Century' and of the Cambridge University Press Series 'Metamorphoses of the Political: Multidisciplinary Approaches'. We are grateful to our ICAS colleagues, both German and Indian, and to Debjani Mazumder, who is in charge of ICAS:MP publications. ICAS:MP has provided the funds required to make this publication open access, a rare and precious opportunity for us.

The book manuscript was intensively workshopped at a round-table discussion held at Centre for the Study of Developing Societies (CSDS).

Our director, Professor Awadhendra Sharan, supported this event despite the financial difficulties our institution has been going through in the last some years. We sincerely thank him. An incredible group of scholars came together to read and comment on each chapter of this manuscript. We are grateful to the discussants who were generous with their time and attention—Anupama Roy, Awadhendra Sharan, Chirashree Dasgupta, Harish Wankhede, Maitrayee Chaudhuri, Navaneetha Mokkil, Neeladri Bhattacharya, Simona Sawhney, Sohini Ghosh, Sukanya Sarbadhikari, and Supriya Chaudhuri. Thanks also to the two anonymous readers of the manuscript.

As always, friends and family have been a constant source of support and inspiration. Our partners, Mallarika and Shailendra, have been part of the overall thinking of the book and cannot be thanked in words.
