Activities

James Brent has been elected to a second one-year term as the chair of the San Jose State University Academic Senate.

Steven R. Brown, professor of political science, Kent State University, has been named editor of Policy Sciences.

Chun-tu Hsueh, Huang Hsing Foundation (USA), was conferred an honorary doctorate by the IFS of the Russian Academy of Sciences. He was elected foreign member of the National Academy of Sciences of Ukraine, which established the Chun-tu Hsueh Center for Asia and Pacific Studies at the Academy's WEIR Institute.

Margaret Scranton, professor of political science, University of Arkansas, Little Rock, is pursuing collaborative projects between the University of Arkansas System and the Clinton Presidential Library and School.

Administrative Appointments

Robert Eisinger, chair, department of political science, Lewis & Clark College.

Frances Hagopian, director, Kellogg Institute for International Studies, University of Notre Dame.

Rodney Hero, chair, department of political science, University of Notre Dame, effective Fall 2002.

Melvin Kulbicki, chair, department of history and political science, York College (PA).

A. James McAdams, director, Nanovic Institute for European Studies, University of Notre Dame.

Greg Russell, chair, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

W. Bruce Shepard, chancellor, University of Wisconsin, Green Bay; formerly provost, Eastern Oregon University.

Neil Snortland, chair, department of political science, University of Arkansas, Little Rock, effective July 1, 2002.

Stephen M. Walt, academic dean, Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University.

Franke Wilmer, professor and department head, department of political science, Montana State University.

New Appointments

Kellie Butler, assistant professor of political science, Pennsylvania State University; formerly Rice University. She begins full-time teaching and research at Penn State in fall 2003.

Timothy Crawford, assistant professor, department of political science, Boston College; formerly the Brookings Institution.

Kenneth Fernandez, department of political science, Kent State University.

Michael Givel, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Ange-Marie Hancock, assistant professor of political science and women's studies, Pennsylvania State University; formerly University of San Francisco.

Errol Henderson, associate professor of political science and African and African American studies, Pennsylvania State University; formerly Wayne State University.

Carson Holloway, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Nebraska, Omaha; formerly Concord College.

Lisa M. Holmes, department of political science, University of Vermont; formerly University of North Carolina, Greensboro.

Robert Jackson, associate professor, department of political science, Florida State University.

Timothy Krebs, assistant professor, department of political science, University of New Mexico.

Nancy Martorano, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Dayton.

B. "Rick" Mayes, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Richmond.

FOR THE RECORD

Kay Lehman Schlozman, professor and chair of the political science department at Boston College has been named the inaugural holder of the J. Joseph Moakley Chair in Political Science. Citing the shared goals of human rights and social justice, Boston College announced the creation of a political science chair in memory of Representative J. Joseph Moakley, the South Boston congressman who died of leukemia last year.

Schlozman is a student of various forms of citizen politics, and her work has followed American voluntary activism in politics, charity and religion. The result is numerous publications, including her latest, The Private Roots of Public Action (Harvard University Press, 2001), with Nancy Burns and Sidney Verba.

Schlozman joined the BC faculty in 1974 after receiving her B.A. from Wellesley College and her M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Chicago.

Moakley is the second congressman to be honored with an endowed chair by Boston College. An endowed chair in the name of former Speaker Tip O'Neill (D-MA) was created in 1979.

Schlozman was awarded the chair in a March ceremony attended by five members of the Massachusetts congressional delegation and Boston College's highest officials.

Kay Lehman Schlozman

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096502000604 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Michael Owens, assistant professor of political science, with a courtesy appointment in the department of African and African American studies, Pennsylvania State University; formerly Emory University. He begins full time teaching and research at Penn State in fall 2003.

John Parrish, assistant professor, department of political science, The Ohio State University.

David Paul, assistant professor, department of political science, The Ohio State University, Newark Campus.

Jason Pierce, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Dayton.

Byron Price, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Dayton.

Andrew Reynolds, assistant professor, department of political science, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Ali Riaz, assistant professor, department of politics and government, Illinois State University.

Katrina Schwartz, senior lecturer, department of political science, Pennsylvania State University; formerly University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Trent Shaskan, assistant professor and coordinator, Urban Studies minor, department of political science, University of Arkansas, Little Rock; formerly Northern Illinois University.

Gordon Silverstein, associate professor, department of political science, Lewis & Clark College.

Wendy Smooth, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Milada Vachudova, assistant professor, department of political science, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Daniel Verdier, associate professor, department of political science, The Ohio State University.

Neal Woods, assistant professor, department of government and international studies, University of South Carolina.

Barry D. Friedman, professor of political science and coordinator of the M.P.A. Program at North Georgia College & State University, received the university's Alumni Association Distinguished Professor Award for 2002. Selection for the award is based on the nominee's "total service" to the university. Friedman, who won the same award in 1997, has led the M.P.A. program since 1996.

Virginia Gray recently joined the department of political science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill as a Robert Watson Winston Distinguished Professor. Gray has built a national reputation for scholarship in state politics and public policy during her many years at the University of Minnesota. She will teach the introductory state politics course and graduate-level seminars on state politics and public policy.

Robert Huckfeldt, professor of political science at Indiana University, was named director of research at the university's Center on Congress. The center seeks to improve public understanding of Congress by reaching out to the average citizen. He is currently engaged in studies of political participation, electoral dynamics, and social influence in electoral politics.

Philip Davies, professor of American Studies at De Montfort University, has been appointed director of the David and Mary Eccles Centre for American Studies at the British Library, London. The Eccles Centre at the British Library was founded in 1991 with the aim of strengthening the good relations between North America and Europe. Davies will continue to teach part-time at De Montfort University, Leicester, while also commuting to the Eccles Centre in London.

Ewa Golebiowska, has joined the faculty at Wayne State University as associate professor of political science, filling a tenure-track position in American governmental institutions and processes. Previously she served as assistant professor at Tufts University. A 1995 Ph.D. from Ohio State University, her research focuses on political tolerance.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096502000604 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Walter D. Broadnax, dean of the School of Public Affairs at American University, has been selected as president-elect of Clark Atlanta University. He will assume the duties of president in August 2002. One of America's leading scholar-practitioners in the field of public policy and management, he has served as dean at AU since 1999 and served as deputy secretary of Health and Human Services during the Clinton administration.

James Stoner, a professor of political science at Louisiana State University, has been nominated by President Bush to serve on the National Council on the Humanities (NCH), the advisory council of the National Endowment for the Humanities. Stone has written and spoken on a broad range of topics from political theory to constitutional law.

Kay Lawson, emeritus professor of political science at San Francisco State University has been named coeditor (along with James Meadowcroft of Sheffield University) of the International Political Science Review, effective July 2002. Lawson is also president of the Committee on Political Sociology of the International Political Science Association and organizer of the Committee's Workgroup on Elections and Parties.

Mark Blasius, professor of political science at the City University of New York, was awarded a residency at the Rockefeller Foundation's Study and Conference Center in Bellagio, Italy during 2001.

William F. Connelly Jr., professor of politics at Washington and Lee University's Williams School of Commerce, Economics and Politics, has been awarded the John K. Boardman endowed professorship. A member of the Washington & Lee faculty since 1986, Connelly specializes in American politics, Congress, and the legislative process, and is author of Congress' Permanent Minority? Republicans in the U.S. House with John J. Pitney Jr. (Rowman & Littlefield, 1994).

Promotions

Frank M. Bryan, professor, department of political science, University of Vermont.

Patrick Coy, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Kent State University.

Matthew J. Franck, professor, department of political science, Radford University. Additionally, Franck received the Radford University Foundation Award for Creative Scholarship at the May 2001 commencement. He continues as department chair.

Katy Harriger, professor, department of political science, Wake Forest University.

Dennis Hart, associate professor, department of political science, Kent State University.

Jyl Josephson, associate professor, department of politics and government, Illinois State University.

Robert G. Kaufman, professor, department of political science, University of Vermont.

Melvin Kulbicki, professor, department of history and political science, York College (PA).

Wei-chin Lee, professor, department of political science, Wake Forest University.

Nancy Lind, professor, department of politics and government, Illinois State University.

Margaret Pearson, professor, department of government and politics, University of Maryland, College Park.

Kenneth Peter, professor, department of political science, San Jose State University.

Jos Raadschelders, professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Cindy Simon Rosenthal, associate professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Mark J. Rozell, professor, department

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096502000604 Published online by Cambridge University Press

of political science, Catholic University of America.

Miranda Schreurs, associate professor, department of government and politics, University of Maryland, College Park.

Peter Siavelis, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Wake Forest University.

Michael W. Simon, principal political science analyst, weapons of mass destruction (WMD) directorate, SPARTA, Inc.

Marco Steenbergen, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Robert P. Taylor, professor, department of political science, University of Vermont.

T.Y. Wang, professor, department of politics and government, Illinois State University.

Vincent Wei-cheng Wang, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, University of Richmond.

Jacqueline Yates, associate professor, department of political science, Kent State University.

Retirements

Howard Ball, professor, department of political science, University of Vermont.

Jim Best, department of political science, Kent State University.

Thomas Eimermann, department of politics and government, Illinois State University.

Jack Gargan, department of political science, Kent State University.

George Gordon, department of politics and government, Illinois State University.

Robert Hunt, department of politics and government, Illinois State University.

Kent Kirwan, department of political science, University of Nebraska, Omaha.

Alan Monroe, department of politics and government, Illinois State University.

KUDOS

At the age of 12 Jeffrey Broadbent met a Zen Buddhist monk, an experience that would not only lead him to study under Japanese Zen masters, but propel him to complete the Japanese language program at Japan's International Christian University and eventually focus on the causes and cures of environmental damage in Japan.

In June of 2001 Broadbent, an associate professor of sociology at the University of Minnesota, was recognized with the Masayoshi Ohira Prize for his book Environmental Politics in Japan: Networks of Power and Protest (Cambridge University Press, 1998). The book examines how Japan dealt with the 1960s' "Growth versus Environment Dilemma" and rapidly reduced its air and water pollution and conserved energy while continuing to expand the economy.

The Masayoshi Ohira Memorial Prize was established following the death of the former prime minister of Japan, who was renowned for thinking deeply about the future of Japan and the world. The prize awards scholars who, like Ohira, contribute to making and implementing good political policies.

Over his career Broadbent has authored a number of works on Japanese environmental and labor issues and he is the chair of East Asian Studies in the Institute of Global Studies at the University of Minnesota. Broadbent received his Ph.D. from Harvard University.

A Clean Sweep

Everybody has a fascination with lists, but rather than top-grossing movies or songs, this list finds political scientists leading the pack. In his book, Public Intellectuals: A Study in the Decline (Harvard University Press, 2002), U.S. Federal Judge Richard Posner tackles the top 100 public intellectuals and presents political science Ph.D.s Henry Kissinger, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, and George Will as his top three. Also included on the list is former APSA president James Q. Wilson (95), along with political columnist and author E. J. Dionne.

In his book Posner defines a "public intellectual" and explains the working of what he calls the "intellectual marketplace"—supply and demand as it applies to ideas and predictions.

For the complete top 100 list visit PSOnline <www.apsanet.org/PS>.

Visiting and Temporary Positions

Patricia A. Moynagh, visiting assistant professor, department of political science, University of Vermont.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096502000604 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Vincent Kelly Pollard, temporary assistant professor, Honors and Selected Studies Program, University of Hawai'i, Manoa.

Awards

Robert F. Durant, Rosenberg Professor of Public, Private, and Nonprofit Partnerships, University of Baltimore, has been awarded a 2002–3 Fulbright Research Fellowship to study the politics of genetically modified food regulation in Thailand. He will be in residence at the Payap Research and Development Institute at Payap University in Chiang Mai, Thailand.

Fred M. Frohock, professor of political science, Syracuse University, was selected to receive the 2002 Chancellors Citation for Exceptional Academic Achievement.

Gretchen Helmke, assistant professor of political science, University of Notre Dame, will be an Academy Scholars Fellow at Harvard University for 2002–4.

Frederic D. Homer, professor of political science, University of Wyoming, was awarded the John T. Ellbogen for Meritorious Classroom Teaching, the university's most prestigious teaching award.

Robert A. Schuhmann, assistant professor of political science and director, master of public administration program, University of Wyoming, won the university's 2002 Hollon Family Award for Teaching Excellence in Off-Campus Programs, which recognizes teaching excellence in programs administered by the Outreach School.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1049096502000604 Published online by Cambridge University Press