NFID Revises Research Priorities

The National Foundation for Infectious Diseases (NFID) recently revised its ranking of the "ten most threatening infectious diseases." Although acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) remains at the top of the list, the NFID warned against further cuts in training and research in non-AIDS infectious diseases. Hospital-acquired infections, adding more than $2 billion to healthcare costs annually, are number four in the NFID list, after AIDS, respiratory infections and hepatitis.
