https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781412000163 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Contributors, April 2012 (11.2)

Katherine Benton-Cohen is an associate professor of history at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. She teaches courses in women's and gender history, the American West, and race and immigration. She is the author of Borderline Americans: Racial Division and Labor War in the Arizona Borderlands (2009) and is currently writing a book on the Dillingham Commission and Progressive Era America.

Jonathan S. Coit is an assistant professor of history at Eastern Illinois University. This article is drawn from his book project on African Americans and the legal aftermath of the 1919 Chicago riot.

Thomas J. Jablonsky is the Harry G. John Professor of Urban Studies at Marquette University and the author of Home, Heaven and Mother Party (1994) as well as Pride in the Jungle (1993). He is at work on a collective biography of the mayors of Los Angeles from 1850 to 1941.

Kenneth R. Janken is a professor in the Department of African and Afro-American Studies at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. He is the author of Rayford W. Logan and the Dilemma of the African-American Intellectual (1993) and Walter White: Mr. NAACP (2006). He is working on a history of the Wilmington Ten, legal repression, and African American political action in the 1970s.

Robert D. Johnston is associate professor and director of the Teaching of History Program, University of Illinois at Chicago. His book, The Radical Middle Class: Populist Democracy and the Question of Capitalism in Progressive Era Portland, Oregon (2003), was awarded the Social Science History Association President's Book Award. The latest of his historiographical essays on progressivism is "The Possibilities of Politics: Democracy in America, 1877–1917" in Eric Foner and Lisa McGirr, eds., American History Now (2011). He is writing a history of controversies over vaccination in American history for Oxford University Press.

Kevin Kokomoor is a doctoral candidate at Florida State University and an instructor at the University of South Florida, Sarasota-Manatee. A specialist in Early American history, he has received the Walbolt Dissertation Fellowship for spring 2012 for work on his dissertation, "Africans, Indians, and the Spanish Frontier: 1784–1821." A fisherman as well as historian of the sport, he published, "'The Most Strenuous of Anglers' Sports Is Tarpon Fishing': The Silver King as Progressive Era Outdoor Sport," in the Journal of Sport History, August 2010.

Alan M. Kraut is University Professor at American University in Washington, D.C, and president-elect of the Organization of American Historians. A specialist in immigration and ethnic history, the history of medicine, and nineteenth-century social history, he is author or editor of eight books and many articles, including The Huddled Masses: The Immigrant in American Society, 1880–1921 (1982; rev. 2001), American Refugee Policy and European Jewry, 1933–1945 (co-authored), Silent Travelers: Germs, Genes, and the "Immigrant Menace" (1994), and Goldberger's War: The Life and Work of a Public Health Crusader (2003). Chair of the History Advisory Committee of the Statue of Liberty–Ellis Island Foundation, he is also a former president of the Immigration and Ethnic History Society.

Maddalena Marinari, assistant professor of U.S. history at St. Bonaventure University, specializes in migration and ethnic history. She is currently revising a manuscript on the effects of restrictive immigration policies on Italian and Jewish communities in the United States from 1882 to 1965. A member of the executive board of the Immigration and Ethnic History Society, she also serves as co-chair of the immigration network for the Social Science Research Association. Before joining the faculty at St. Bonaventure, she held positions at American University, the American Historical Association, and the National History Center.

Robert C. McGreevey is an assistant professor of history at the College of New Jersey. His article, "Empire and Migration: Coastwise Shipping, National Status, and the Colonial Legal Origins of Puerto Rican Migration to the United States," will appear in the October 2012 issue of the Journal of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781412000163 Published online by Cambridge University Press

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1537781412000163 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Timothy Meagher is an associate professor of history and curator of American Catholic history collections at the Catholic University of America. He has written, among other books and articles, Inventing Irish America: Generation, Class, and Ethnic Identity in a New England City, 1880–1928 (2001) and edited with Ronald Bayor The New York Irish (1996). He is currently working on an overall history of Irish Americans.

Worth Robert Miller is a professor of history at Missouri State University. His works include "The Lost World of Gilded Age Politics," Journal of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era 1 (Jan. 2002): 49–67 and Populist Cartoons: An Illustrated History of the Populist Movement in the 1890s (Kirksville, MO, 2011).

Deirdre M. Moloney, director of fellowships at Princeton University, is the author of the forthcoming National Insecurities: Immigrants and U.S. Deportation Policy since 1882 and American Catholic Lay Groups and Transatlantic Social Reform in the Progressive Era (2002). In 2007–08, she was a fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in Washington, D.C.

Jeffrey M. Stonecash, professor of political science in the Maxwell School at Syracuse University, has published Dynamics of American Political Parties (2009) with Mark Brewer and Counter-Realignment: Political Change in the Northeast (2011) with Howard Reiter. He is writing a book about the relationship between presidential and House of Representatives voting since 1900.

Katherine Unterman is an assistant professor of history at Texas A&M University. A specialist in American legal and foreign relations history, she received her PhD from Yale University in 2011. Her current book project, "Nowhere to Hide: International Fugitives and American Power, 1880–1915," examines cross-border fugitives and international manhunts in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.