leader 103 Farewell to Cambridge

design 104 Cities of health, not machines for treatment: Hospital design through an urban lens Benedict Zucchi imagines big hospitals as little cities, promoting human scale, facilitating user participation, and strengthening identity, wayfinding and healing.

practice 123 Behind closed doors: Rethinking adolescent privacy in palliative care Sara Nourmusavi Nasab, Chris. L. Smith and Rebecca McLaughlan address how – in spaces of adolescent palliative care – monitoring, visibility, and spatial autonomy intersect with identity and sexuality.

139 A psychological study of public library architecture associated with users' behaviours in Shiraz (Iran) Mahshid Naghibi considers the impact of spatial features of libraries on the behaviours of users and ideas of meaning.

history 149 Revisiting modernity and coloniality in Brasília: A decolonial perspective on architectural and urban spaces Rogério Rezende and Hilde Heynen examine discourses surrounding the urban architecture of Brasília, particularly the Alvorada Palace, uncovering how coloniality manifests within the city's modernity.

163 Representing the 'People's Republic': the Chinese Pavilion at the Knoxville International Energy Exposition, 1982 Yinrui Xie reviews this pavilion witnessing China's interaction with the US during a moments of diplomatic sensitivity, economic uncertainty, and shifting ideological positions.

177 Book of Illusions? Theo Crosby's How to Play the Environment Game in retrospect Nicholas Phelps and Alan Pert return to Theo Crosby's How to Play the Environment Game, representing the impossibility of architectural intentionality in the production of the built environment.

theory 187 The thing about lines Harry Thompson explores a curious conundrum of agency within a flat ontology of design and drawing, asking whether an active line could ever take itself out for a walk.

199 Literalism and its limits Peter Olshavsky discusses the presumptions of literalism, arguing for non-literal language's role in deepening historical understanding.

urbanism 209 Re-placing genius loci: An architectural ethnography of small places in Quanzhou's pu-jing system Yifan Wang, Jie Zhang, Yingjun Li, Sixiang Peng, Xiaolei Ma and Wentai Cui employing architectural ethnography and research-by-drawing to unravel Quanzhou's pu-jing neighborhoods.

227 Teaching Space: Experimentation at VKhUTEMAS (1923–1926) Marco Iuliano examines the novel educational model adopted by VKhUTEMAS, the art and technical state school active in Moscow between 1920 and 1926.

245 Extracting the thick and thin of Fragrant Harbour Patrick Cheng-Chun Hwang and Peter W. Ferretto reflect on collective drawing's capacity to draw out Hong Kong's layered multi-temporality and spatiality.

259 Space for and by autistic students: Leveraging lived experiences to inform design interventions Ruben Bamps, Sara Willems, Phuong Nguyen and Ann Heylighen explore experiences of five autistic students, examining how the built environment affects their comfort through clarity, distractions, and spatial control.

reviews

271 The tech-boys, utopian futures and the Venice Architecture Biennale, 2025 Luis Hernan reviews the current Architecture Bienale.

284 The Analogical City Reviewed by Nadia Bartolini.
