2025 Andrew Carnegie Fellows

APSA congratulates this year's political science scholars elected to the 2025 Class of the Andrew Carnegie Fellowship program! The Andrew Carnegie Fellows Program provides philanthropic support for high-caliber scholarship in the humanities and social sciences that addresses pressing societal challenges. Under the leadership of Carnegie Corporation of New York president Dame Louise Richardson, the 2025 class marks the second year of the program's renewed emphasis on political polarization—an issue of growing national concern.

Over a three-year period, the Corporation will invest up to $18 million to support research that strengthens democracy and civic life. Each fellowship supports up to two years of work, with an anticipated outcome of a book or major study aimed at reaching broad audiences.

Amy E. Lerman
Michelle Schwartz Chair and Professor of Public Policy and Political Science, University of California, Berkeley

Adam J. Berinsky
Mitsui Professor of Political Science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology

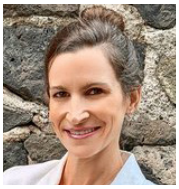

Jacob Brown
Assistant Professor of Political Science, Boston University

Jonathan Rodden
Professor of Political Science, Stanford University

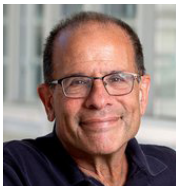

Milan Svolik
Elizabeth S. & A. Varick Stout Professor of Political Science, Yale University

Dawn Langan Teele
SNF Agora Institute Associate Professor of Political Science, Johns Hopkins University

Christopher Sebastian Parker
Professor of Political Science, University of California, Santa Barbara

David S. Meyer
Professor of Sociology, Political Science, and Urban Planning and Public Policy, University of California, Irvine

Matt Grossmann
Director of the Institute for Public Policy and Social Research and Professor of Political Science, Michigan State University

© AMERICAN POLITICAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION 2025

https://doi.org/10.1017/psj.2025.10096 Published online by Cambridge University Press