FIFTY YEARS • TRANSITION CELEBRATES ITS STORIED HISTORY

50 YEARS 1961–2011 TRANSITION

Read more about Transition's history here: http://dubois.fas.harvard.edu/transition-magazine

How is it possible to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of a magazine that has spanned three countries, two continents, and several long stretches of silence? Transition 106 provides many answers. Rather than telling a seamless story about our journey from Africa to the Diaspora, we have called upon generations of remarkable contributors to define what the magazine has meant to them. The diversity of responses is astonishing: Henry Finder describes it as "the internationalization of the African mind," Ilan Stavans fancifully dubs it "the Jewish journal of blackness," and for Wole Soyinka it has been nothing short of a "universal mission." If there shall be "no birth without miscegination," as our founder Rajat Neogy memorably declared, there shall be no remembrance without it either.

We devote the other half of this celebratory issue to Uganda, our birthplace. We return less to pay homage to our past than to imagine our future. Elizabeth Palchik Allen introduces exciting work from David Kaiza, Okello Ogwang, Richard Ssebaggala, and many others, all of whom explore their country's "postcolonial identity" and call into question the easy coupling of those words.

SIDE A

Paul Theroux on Kampala in the 1960's

Ali Mazrui on the Arab Spring and other African revolutions

Jack Hamilton on Gil Scott-Heron and why we need to rewrite the history of black music

... and more

SIDE B

David Kaiza on being sick of the African Writers Series

Richard Ssebaggala on the state of gay rights in Uganda

A new story from Caine Prize finalist Doreen Baingana

... and more

Transition came into being in 1961, in the midst of independence movements and breaks with colonial rule across the African continent. What was needed then was a forum for intellectual debate and cultural exchange about this simultaneously ancient and emerging continent. A half-century later, this forum is still vital to our understanding of the richness and complexity of the African world, both within the continent's borders and beyond. This has never been an easy journal to produce because the ideas contained in it are so fast-moving and so alive. But we look forward to the challenge for at least another fifty years and remain steadfast in carrying out its original mission: to provide a space for the exchange of all manner of thinking on the far-reaching African world.
