Acknowledgments

I would first of all like to thank Lucia Michelutti, whose European Research Council (ERC) project "Democratic Cultures" made it possible for me to begin new research in the Indian Punjab in 2013. Beyond that opportunity for new fieldwork, Lucia created a vibrant, stimulating, and encouraging team—including Arild Ruud, Ashraf Hoque, Clarinda Still, David Picherit, Paul Rollier, and Anastasia Piliavsky—that played a crucial role in shaping how I thought about the material that has gone into this book.

I would also like to extend my heartfelt thanks to Gurharpal Singh, who by introducing me to Darshan Tatla opened a number of doors for me in Punjab. Darshan welcomed me into his home outside Ludhiana over several days, and his encyclopedic knowledge and passion for all things related to Punjab provided the impetus for me to embark on the research for this book. He also shared valuable contacts, most notably Lakhwinder Singh Gill at Punjabi University, Patiala, who received me with great warmth, and introduced me to several colleagues, including Sucha Singh Gill and Pritam Singh, all of whom I had valuable exchanges with over the years.

Here I would like to thank my research assistant, Injinder Singh, for his diligent work and friendship, as well as all my hosts in the pseudonymously named tehsil Lakhmandi and village Nurpur, who opened their homes, thoughts, and observations to me, as well as the—almost without exception—hospitable and open people I was fortunate to interview over the past ten years in Punjab.

I further wish to extend my heartfelt thanks to Nate Roberts, for his sustained interest in my work and for his generous and extensive feedback over the years, and to John Harriss, who consistently agreed to read and comment on my drafts. I hope I have done justice to his thoughtful critiques here. Similarly, I am deeply grateful to Rupa Viswanath and Ashwin Subramaniam for their valuable comments on a draft of this book. Beyond their intellectual input, Nate, Rupa, John, and Ashwin were instrumental in keeping me motivated to complete this manuscript. I also want to thank the team at Editrix for their invaluable help with editing the manuscript.

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 23:46:24, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/9781009679053

A number of colleagues at the University of Zurich have also been important in bringing this project to completion, through both their feedback and institutional support. I would especially like to thank Angelika Malinar for her interest in my work and for providing the time and space to develop it—not least by sparing me administrative responsibilities that might have made it difficult to do so. I am also grateful to Sofie Heintz, Julien Levesque, Genevieve England, Mukesh Kumar, and Satendra Kumar for the many valuable conversations and for their comments on aspects of this work. Thanks are also due to Johannes Quack and Benedikt Korf for our collaborations and the intellectual exchanges we shared over the years.

While Jonathan Parry, my PhD supervisor, did not play a role in the production of the research presented here, his scholarship did. The latter, and our exchanges during my PhD, fueled my interest in the study of social inequality. I would also like to thank Mukulika Banerjee for suggesting that I undertake fieldwork in the Indian Punjab to gain a comparative perspective with the Pakistani Punjab—a comparison that remains a task for the future.

I would like to end by thanking the Swiss Mercator Foundation for its visionary support for the expansion of Indian Studies at the University of Zurich. By providing the initial funding for the chair I now hold, the Foundation laid the institutional groundwork that made this research trajectory possible. I am deeply grateful for this sustained commitment to the field. I also gratefully acknowledge the support of the Swiss National Science Foundation for the project The Reproduction of Caste? Economic, Political and Kinship Strategies among Jats in Punjab (Grant No. 185411). This funding made it possible to undertake additional research in Punjab and provided the essential conditions for completing this book.

Finally, I owe a special debt of gratitude to my wife Emily, who by accompanying me to India made my further academic career possible.

Downloaded from https://www.cambridge.org/core. UNIVERSIDAD AUTONOMA METROPOLITANA, on 16 Nov 2026 at 23:46:24, subject to the Cambridge Core terms of use, available at https://www.cambridge.org/core/terms. https://doi.org/10.1017/9781009679053