Migration and National Identity in South Africa, 1860–2010
Audie Klotz
Cambridge University Press

From the publisher: Xenophobic violence against foreign migrants is a disturbing and ongoing feature of the 'new' South African politics. Audie Klotz provides a fine-grained analysis that explores the roots of this phenomenon. She shows that such xenophobia is not new to South Africa, but has emerged on a number of occasions over the past hundred years. Her analysis of the economic nationalism driving the violence is supplemented by a comparison of the experience of discrimination against foreign migrants found in the histories of Australia and Canada. She concludes with useful suggestions about policy directions that might be followed to ameliorate this violence.

Audie Klotz is associate professor of political science at the Maxwell School of Syracuse University. She received her PhD from Cornell University, and has taught at Haverford College, the University of Illinois at Chicago, and Stellenbosch University. Her first book, Norms in International Relations: The Struggle against Apartheid (1995), won the Furniss Prize in security studies.

Representing Europeans: A Pragmatic Approach
Richard Rose
Oxford University Press

From the publisher: Rose makes a fresh assessment of the challenge facing the European Union today: it can no longer carry out integration by stealth. Measures adopted to save the eurozone impose visible political costs without clearly visible benefits. There is a lack of popular commitment to more European integration because EU institutions represent its citizens indirectly or not at all. Reliance on citizenship lite is politically dangerous, since people retain the power to reject their national government because of commitments it makes in Brussels. The book's pragmatic approach recommends that enhanced European integration should be based on coalitions of the willing and accommodation of the unwilling. Federalists and Eurosceptics will alternatively agree and disagree with the argument of this book. But they cannot ignore the challenge it raises for the EU to pay more attention to the half a billion people it claims to represent.

Richard Rose is an American by birth but European by residence but not citizenship. This gives him a uniquely broad perspective on what's happening to the European Union and Europeans in a globalizing world. He is Director of the Centre for the Study of Public Policy at the University of Strathclyde Glasgow.
