VOLUME 8, NUMBER 2

Lawrie Balfour is Professor of Politics at the University of Virginia. The author of Democracy's Reconstruction: Thinking Politically with W. E. B. Du Bois (2011) and The Evidence of Things Not Said: James Baldwin and the Promise of American Democracy (2001), she has published articles on race and democratic theory in Political Theory, American Political Science Review, Hypatia, The Review of Politics, and edited collections. She is currently working on a book on reparations for slavery and Jim Crow.

Cristina Beltrán is Associate Professor in the Department of Social and Cultural Analysis at New York University. Specializing in democratic theory, feminist theory, American political thought, and contemporary Latino politics, her research centers on questions of membership, identity, inequality, and the way in which these forces shape deliberation and participation in the public sphere. She has published articles and chapters on a variety of topics including: mestizaje and the feminist theory of Gloria Anzaldúa, democratic spectacle in the poetry of Walt Whitman, and an analysis of double-consciousness through the work of Jean-Jacques Rousseau. Her book, The Trouble with Unity: Latino Politics and the Creation of Identity (2010) draws upon political, feminist, and cultural theory to explore the various ways that Latinos in the United States construct themselves as political subjects. She is currently writing a book on Latino conservatives provisionally titled Latino Conservatives: Racial Shame, Racial Success, and the Politics of Transformation.

Pamela R. Bennett is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the Johns Hopkins University and a former Spencer Foundation Postdoctoral Fellow. Her research interests lie in two areas: racial residential segregation and sociology of education. Her work on the segregation of multiracial groups appears in Ethnic and Racial Studies; her research on the cognitive consequences of residential segregation appears in Social Science Research; while her work on African American and Black immigrants' net advantage over Whites in attending selective colleges appears in the American Sociological Review and Sociology of Education. With Amy Lutz and Lakshmi Jayaram, Bennett is engaged in a multi-year project that examines the influences of social, cultural, and financial capital on race, nativity, and social class differences in parenting practices and children's achievement.

Florent de Bodman is a student at the French École Nationale d'Administration in Strasbourg, where he is completing a professional training in public policy, with a major in social policy. Previously, he was a student at the École Normale Superieure of Paris, where he specialized in political philosophy and political science. In 2007, he was a Fellow at the Hoover Chair of Social and Economic Ethics (Université Du Bois Review, 8:2 (2011) 523–527.

© 2011 W. E. B. Du Bois Institute for African and African American Research 1742-058X/11 $15.00
doi:10.1017/S1742058X1100049X

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1742058X1100049X Published online by Cambridge University Press

Catholique de Louvain), where he worked on the ethical justification of the right to housing.

Robert Brown is Professor of English, one-year hire, at Brigham Young University-Idaho. His research interests include questions of transformative identity in self-replicating paradigms. He completed his MA in English literature from The George Washington University.

William A. ("Sandy") Darity, Jr. is Arts & Sciences Professor of Public Policy Studies and Economics, Chair of African and African American Studies, and Director of the Research Network on Racial and Ethnic Inequality at Duke University. Darity's research focuses on inequality by race, class, and ethnicity; stratification economics; schooling and the racial achievement gap; North-South theories of trade and development; skin shade and labor market outcomes; the economics of reparations; the Atlantic slave trade and the Industrial Revolution; doctrinal history; and the social psychological effects of unemployment exposure. His most recent books are Economics, Economists, and Expectations: Microfoundations to Macroapplications (2004) (co-authored with Warren Young and Robert Leeson) and a volume co-edited with Ashwini Deshpande titled Boundaries of Clan and Color: Transnational Comparisons of Inter-Group Disparity (2003) both published by Routledge. He has published or edited ten books and more than 200 articles in professional journals.

W. E. B. Du Bois (1868–1963) was a pioneering sociologist, historian, novelist, playwright, and cultural critic, who committed his life to a relentless opposition to racial and social injustice. He was a peerless organizer who helped to found both the Niagara Movement and the NAACP, and who fostered several Pan African Congresses. For years, he was editor of The Crisis and other progressive journals, and was an international spokesperson for peace and the rights of oppressed minorities.

Herbert J. Gans is the Robert S. Lynd Professor Emeritus of Sociology at Columbia University. He received his PhD from the University of Pennsylvania in Social Planning and has taught at Columbia University since 1971. His primary research interests are: poverty and antipoverty policy; race and ethnicity; urban democracy and equality; and the news media. He is the author of a dozen books, his first being The Urban Villagers (1962), his latest Imagining America in 2033 (2008). He has held Guggenheim, Marshall, and Media Studies Center Fellowships and a Russell Sage Foundation Visiting Scholarship and received ASA's Distinguished Scholarship award and lifetime merit awards from its Migration and Urban sections. He is a past President of the American Sociological Association and a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Tanya Golash-Boza is the author of Yo Soy Negro: Blackness in Peru (University Press of Florida, 2011), and Immigration Nation: Raids, Detentions and Deportations in Post-9/11 America (Paradigm Publishers, 2012), in addition to over a dozen peer-reviewed articles in journals such as Social Forces, Social Problems, and Ethnic and Racial Studies, and dozens of essays in online magazines including The Nation, Counterpunch, Dissident Voice and Racism Review. Her scholarship recently earned the Distinguished Early Career Award of the Racial and Ethnic Minorities Studies Section of the American Sociological Association. She is currently writing a new book, Deported: The Collateral Consequences of Mass Deportation, based on over 150 interviews with deportees in Brazil, Guatemala, Jamaica, and the Dominican Republic. She maintains a writing blog at: http://getalifephd.blogspot.com/.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1742058X1100049X Published online by Cambridge University Press

Robert Gooding-Williams is the Ralph and Mary Otis Isham Professor of Political Science and the College at the University of Chicago. He is the author of Zarathustra's Dionysian Modernism (Stanford, 2001), Look, A Negro!: Philosophical Essays on Race, Culture, and Politics (Routledge, 2005), and In The Shadow of Du Bois: Afro-Modern Political Thought in America (Harvard 2009). In 2010, In the Shadow of Du Bois won three book commendations: one for the best book on race, ethnicity, and political thought awarded by the Race, Ethnicity, and Politics section of the American Political Science Association (APSA); the second, an honorable mention citation for the David Easton Award, awarded by the Foundations of Political Theory section of the APSA; and the third, a Choice Outstanding Academic Title of 2010.

Mark Gould is Professor of Sociology and Chair of the Department of Sociology at Haverford College. He has a BA in Sociology from Reed College and a PhD in Sociology from Harvard University. He is a social theorist; consequently, he gets to teach and write about whatever he chooses, including the nature of contemporary racism, culture, opportunity structures and poverty in the inner-city United States, and the logic of perfect and imperfect information microeconomic models and why the latter need to be reconstructed sociologically. He is now writing about the nature of religious commitment and its consequences in Islam, about Islamic constitutionalism, the role of reason in Christianity and Islam, Islamic Modernism, and the genesis of Islamic religious and political movements, including the Iranian Revolution and contemporary events in Iran.

José Itzigsohn is Professor of Sociology at Brown University. He has published extensively on the topic of immigrant incorporation. He is the author of Encountering American Faultlines: Race, Class, and Dominican Experience in Providence (2009). This book analyzes the incorporation experiences of Dominican Americans, and it was a co-winner of the 2009 American Sociological Association Latino/a Sociology Section Best Book Award (together with Generations of Exclusion).

Kimberley S. Johnson is Associate Professor of Political Science at Barnard College, Columbia University. Her research focuses on the intersections between American political development, federalism and intergovernmental relations, race and ethnic politics, bureaucracy, and public policy. She is the author of Reforming Jim Crow: Southern Politics and State in the Pre-Brown South (2010) and Governing the American State: Congress and the New Federalism 1877–1929 (2006).

Vilma Ortiz is Professor of Sociology at University of California, Los Angeles. Her research addresses broad theoretical issues on racial/ethnic stratification and social inequality. For more than twenty years, she has studied the socio-economic experiences of Latinos in the United States, focusing both on specific Latino groups as well as comparative studies with other racial/ethnic groups. She and Edward Telles are co-authors of the award-winning Generations of Exclusion: Mexican Americans, Assimilation, and Race (Russell Sage, 2008).

Thomas Pettigrew is Research Professor of Social Psychology at the University of California, Santa Cruz. A Harvard PhD, he also taught at Harvard (1957–1980) and the University of Amsterdam (1986–1991). He was a Fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences and the Netherlands Institute for Advanced Study and has conducted intergroup research throughout the world. He was President of the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues and has received the Society's Lewin Award, twice its Allport Intergroup Research Award, the Society for Experimental Social Psychology's Distinguished Scientist Award, and the University of California's Panunzio Distinguished Emeriti Award. Pettigrew has also been honored with six lifetime achievement awards from both psychological and sociological organizations.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1742058X1100049X Published online by Cambridge University Press

Tommie Shelby is Professor of African and African American Studies and Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. He is the author of We Who Are Dark: The Philosophical Foundations of Black Solidarity (Harvard University Press, 2005). His research focuses on racial and economic justice and on the history of Black political thought, and his articles have appeared in such journals as Philosophy & Public Affairs, Ethics, Political Theory, and Daedalus. He is currently writing a book on justice, race, and urban poverty. He is also coeditor of Transition.

Rogers M. Smith is Christopher H. Browne Distinguished Professor of Political Science at the University of Pennsylvania and Chair of the Penn Program on Democracy, Citizenship, and Constitutionalism. He is the author or co-author of many essays and six books, including Civic Ideals: Conflicting Visions of Citizenship in U.S. History (1997), The Unsteady March: The Rise and Decline of Racial Equality in America (with Philip A. Klinkner, 1999), Stories of Peoplehood (2003), and Still a House Divided: Race and Politics in Obama's America (with Desmond S. King, 2011). These works have received "best book" awards from the American Political Science Association, the Organization of American Historians, the Social Science History Association, and the W. E. B. Du Bois Institute. Smith is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

Marek D. Steedman is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Southern Mississippi. He received a PhD in political theory from the University of Michigan. His work on the relation between race and the liberal and republican traditions in American political thought can be found in Jim Crow Citizenship (forthcoming from Routledge). Other publications include, "Resistance, Rebirth, and Redemption: The Rhetoric of White Supremacy in Post-Civil War Louisiana," in Historical Reflections 35:1 (2009);" "How was Race Constructed in the New South," in the Du Bois Review, 5:1 (2008); and "Gender and the Politics of the Household in Reconstruction Louisiana, 1865–1879," in Gender and Slave Emancipation in The Atlantic World, Diana Patton and Pamela Scully, (Eds.) (Duke University Press, 2005).

Edward E. Telles is Professor of Sociology at Princeton University and director of the Project on Ethnicity and Race (PERLA) in Latin America. His books have won several major award including the Distinguished Publication Award from the American Sociological Association (for Race in Another America: The Significance of Skin Color in Brazil) and the Otis Dudley Duncan Award for the best book in Social Demography, which he won twice (for Race in Another America and Generations of Exclusion: Mexican Americans, Assimilation and Race with Vilma Ortiz). He previously served as the Human Rights Program Officer for the Ford Foundation in Brazil and has been a visiting fellow at the Russell Sage Foundation and a Senior Fulbright Fellow. He is currently Vice President of the American Sociological Association.

Jack Turner is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Washington. He specializes in American political thought, race in American politics, critical race theory, and liberal democratic theory. His book, Awakening to Race: Individualism and Social Consciousness in America, is forthcoming from the University of Chicago Press (2012). His articles have also appeared in Political Theory, Raritan, Modern Intellectual History, and Polity.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1742058X1100049X Published online by Cambridge University Press

William Julius Wilson is Geyser University Professor at Harvard University. He is a recipient of the 1998 National Medal of Science, and was awarded the Talcott Parsons Prize in the Social Sciences by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in 2003. Past President of the American Sociological Association, Wilson has received forty-two honorary degrees, including honorary doctorates from Princeton, Columbia, University of Pennsylvania, Northwestern, Johns Hopkins, Dartmouth, New York University, and the University of Amsterdam in the Netherlands. A MacArthur Prize Fellow from 1987 to 1992, Wilson has been elected to the National Academy of Sciences, the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the American Philosophical Society, the National Academy of Education, the Institute of Medicine, and the British Academy.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1742058X1100049X Published online by Cambridge University Press