Visual Neuroscience (ISSN 0952-5238) publishes experimental and theoretical studies concerning the neural mechanisms of vision. Contributions may deal with molecular, cellular, and systems-level processes in both vertebrate and invertebrate species. Studies based exclusively on clinical, psychophysical, or behavioral data will be considered if they are related to neural mechanisms. Appropriate research areas include: photoreception and transduction, subcortical visual pathways, developmental processes, visually guided behavior, retinal structure and function, cortical mechanisms, oculomotor control, and substrates of perception.

Visual Neuroscience features full-length research papers, short communications, and review articles that critically examine topics related to the journal's principal focus.

Visual Neuroscience is indexed in Current Contents/Life Sciences; Science Citation Index; MEDLINE; Ocular Resources Review; Neuroscience Citation Index; and in the SCISEARCH and ISI/BIOMED databases.
