Contributors

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.

TIM H. BARRETT is professor of East Asian history at SOAS, University of London. His main interests lie in the history of religion in China, but also in constructions of China in the West, particularly Great Britain.

ROBERT S. BAUER is professor of Chinese linguistics in the Department of Chinese and Bilingual Studies of the Hong Kong Polytechnic University. His research interests include the Cantonese script, Cantonese acoustic phonetics, history of Cantonese and other Yue dialects, Thai language, and ethnic minority languages of China and Southeast Asia. He is co-author with Paul K. Benedict of Modern Cantonese Phonology (1997) and, with Cheung Kwan Hin of "The Representation of Cantonese with Chinese Characters" (Journal of Chinese Linguistics, 2002).

THOMAS P. BERNSTEIN is professor of political science at Columbia University. He is the co-author, with Xiaobo Lü, of Taxation without Representation in Contemporary Rural China (2003).

NICOLAS BECQUELIN is associate fellow at the Universities Service Centre, The Chinese University of Hong Kong. He received his PhD in History from the School of Advanced Studies in Social Sciences (EHESS), Paris, and is a former fellow at the French Centre for Research on Contemporary China (CEFC), Hong Kong.

THOMAS J. BICKFORD is a political scientist and an associate professor in the Political Science Department at the University of Wisconsin-Oshkosh. He is also a member of the steering committee for UW Oshkosh's International Studies Program and oversees the Asian Studies minor. His research interests include civil-military relations, defence policy, political economy of the PLA and Chinese foreign policy.

COLIN BROWN is a senior lecturer in rural policy and rural marketing at the University of Queensland. He just published Modernizing China's Industries: Lessons from Wool and Wool Textiles (2005) and is currently writing a book titled Sustainable Development in China's Pastoral Region.

YONGSHUN CAI teaches at the Division of Social Science at the Hong Kong University of Science & Technology.

KARA CHAN is professor at the department of communication studies, Hong Kong Baptist University. Her research interests are mass communication and consumer behaviour in Hong Kong and

© The China Quarterly, 2006 doi: 10.1017/S0305741006000130

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000270 Published online by Cambridge University Press

China. She co-authored Advertising to Children in China (2004) with Professor James McNeal and edited Advertising and Hong Kong Society (2006).

KIN-MAN CHAN received his PhD from Yale and is currently an associate professor of sociology in the Chinese University of Hong Kong. He is also a visiting professor of sociology in Sun Yat-sen University of Guangzhou and co-founder of the Institute for Civil Society there. His main areas of research are corruption, civil society and democratization in Hong Kong and China. His recent publications include "The Development of NGOs under a Post-Totalitarian Regime: The Case of China" in Civil Life, Globalization, and Political Change in Asia: Organizing Between Family and State, edited by Robert Wellner (2005).

CONG CAO is a research fellow at the East Asian Institute, National University of Singapore. His most recent publication is China's Scientific Elite (2004).

TIMOTHY CHEEK is professor and Louis Cha Chair of Chinese Research at the Institute of Asian Research, University of British Columbia, Vancouver. His research focuses on Chinese intellectuals and CCP history from the 1930s to the present.

LEÏLA CHOUKROUNE is assistant professor of Law at HEC Paris. She specializes in international economic law, international human rights law and Chinese law. Her current research focuses on the globalization of law and its impact on law and development issues with a special interest for the Chinese legal framework. Her new book on China and the WTO will be published by Bruylant in 2006.

DELIA DAVIN is emeritus professor of Chinese social studies at the University of Leeds. Her current research interests are on gender and migration in China.

THOMAS DUBOIS is assistant professor of history at the National University of Singapore. He is the author of Sacred Village: Social Change and Religious Life in Rural North China (2005), and is currently working on a project on the engineering of religion in Manchukuo.

GREGORY P. FAIRBROTHER is assistant professor at the Hong Kong Institute of Education. His primary areas of research include citizenship education, political socialization, education policy, and student political attitudes in Hong Kong and mainland China. He is the author of Toward Critical Patriotism: Student Resistance to Political Education in Hong Kong and China (2003).

FU HUALING is director and associate professor at the Centre for Comparative and Public Law, The University of Hong Kong, and visiting professor at the University of Washington School of Law.

POSHEK FU teaches history and cinema studies at University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. He is the author of Between Shanghai and

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000270 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Hong Kong: The Politics of Chinese Cinemas (2003) and co-editor of The Cinema of Hong Kong: History, Arts, Identity (2000).

ANTOINE GOURNAY is a former curator for Chinese Art at the Cernuschi Museum in Paris, and is currently assistant professor in Far Eastern Art and Archaeology at Paris Sorbonne University.

DOUG GUTHRIE is professor of sociology and management at New York University.

MATTHEW DAVID JOHNSON is a PhD candidate in history (modern China) at the University of California, San Diego, and is presently writing his dissertation on "Thought Industry: State, Cinema and Society in the People's Republic of China, 1949–1969."

ANDREW KIPNIS is a fellow in the department of anthropology and the Contemporary China Centre of the Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies at the Australian National University. He is co-editor of The China Journal and author of Producing Guanxi: Sentiment, Self and Subculture in a North China Village (1997).

ANDRÉ LALIBERTÉ received his PhD at the University of British Columbia in 1999 and taught at the University of Ottawa before joining the Université du Québec à Montréal in 2003, where he teaches Chinese politics and holds seminars on political transitions in East Asia. His latest book is The Politics of Buddhist Organizations in Taiwan, 1989–2003 (2004).

YUEN TING LEE is currently teaching in the History Department of Hong Kong Shue Yan College (soon to be renamed Hong Kong Shue Yan University) She is also a contributor for the multi-volume World History Encyclopedia to be published by ABC-CLIO (California) in 2007. Her main research interest pertains to female education in modern China.

HSIAO-TING LIN received his doctoral degree from the Faculty of Oriental Studies, University of Oxford, and is currently a Visiting Fellow at the Hoover Institution, Stanford University. His research focuses on politics and history of the Kuomintang, ethnopolitics and minority issues in Greater China, and history of modern China's ethnic borderlands. He has completed a book manuscript on Nationalist China's Tibetan agenda.

JOHN LONGWORTH is a professor emeritus of the University of Queensland. Over the last two decades, he has published ten books (four of which have also been published in Chinese) on the economics of Chinese ruminant livestock industries.

LYNETTE ONG is a doctoral candidate in political science at the Australian National University. She has conducted extensive fieldwork investigating the nexus between politics and credit in various parts of rural China. She also lectures an undergraduate course on China's political economy of reforms at the university. She is expected to graduate in early 2007.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000270 Published online by Cambridge University Press

JUDY POLUMBAUM is professor at the School of Journalism and Mass Communication, The University of Iowa, Iowa City, USA.

LISA RAPHALS is professor of Chinese and Comparative Literature at the University of California, Riverside, and Book Review Editor of Philosophy East & West. She is author of Knowing Words: Wisdom and Cunning in the Classical Traditions of China and Greece (1982), Sharing the Light: Representations of Women and Virtue in Early China (1998) and many shorter studies, including "Skeptical Strategies in the Zhuangzi and Theaetetus" (Philosophy East & West, 1994) and "A 'Chinese Eratosthenes' Reconsidered: Chinese and Greek Calculations and Categories" (East Asian Science, Technology and Medicine, 2002).

GÜNTER SCHUCHER is director of the Institute of Asian Affairs which is constitutive part of the GIGA German Institute of Global and Area Studies in Hamburg. His research focuses on social issues in the PRC, especially the Chinese labour market. His recent publications include (with M. Schüller, eds.) Perspectives on Cross-Strait Relations. Views from Europe (2004) and (ed.) Asiens neue Wirtschaftsdynamik: Regionale und internationale Dimensionen (2006).

FAYONG SHI is a PhD candidate in the Department of Sociology at the National University of Singapore. He is writing a dissertation on neighbourhood politics in Shanghai.

JON SIGURDSON is professor in Research Policy and director of the East Asia Science & Technology and Culture Programme, at the European Institute of Japanese Studies of the Stockholm School of Economics. His most recent publication is Technological Superpower China (2005). As a researcher in science policy he has developed special expertise in technology management at national and company level.

PHILLIP STALLEY is a PhD candidate in political science at George Washington University. He is presently a visiting scholar at the Fudan University Center for Environmental Economics, where he is conducting research about foreign firms and environmental governance.

CHLOË STARR lectures in Classical Chinese at the University of Oxford. She is also associate director of the Centre for the Study of Christianity in China, an independent research centre based in Oxford. She combines research interests in Qing fictional and liturgical texts.

LUIGI TOMBA works at the Research school of Pacific and Asian Studies, Australian National University, Canberra, in the department of politics and social change and the Contemporary China Centre. His latest book is Paradoxes of Labour Reform: Chinese Theory and Practice from Socialism to the Market (2002). He is the new co-editor, with Andrew Kipnis, of The China Journal.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000270 Published online by Cambridge University Press

ANDREW G. WALDER is professor of sociology at Stanford University and senior fellow in the Stanford Institute for International Studies. He is the editor (with Paul Pickowicz and Joseph Esherick) of The Chinese Cultural Revolution as History (2006).

SCOTT WALDRON is Research Fellow for the China Agricultural Economics Group at the University of Queensland with a special interest in institutional and policy aspects of rural development in China. Recent books include Rural Development in China: Insights from the Beef Industry (2004).

SOPHIA WOODMAN is a researcher in the Department of Law, University of Hong Kong. Her research interests include the evolution of the Chinese Constitution and human rights in China. Her latest publication is "Driving without a Map: Implementing Legal Projects in China Aimed at Improving Human Rights," in Daniel Bell and Joe Carens (eds), Ethics in Action: The Ethical Challenges of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Nongovernmental Organizations (2006).

DONGNING YANG is an assistant professor in the department of management science and engineering at Peking University's Guanghua School of Management. His research focuses primarily on organization and the natural environment issues. His current interests also include corporate social responsibility and environmental entrepreneurship.

LITAO ZHAO is research fellow at East Asian Institute, National University of Singapore. His research interests include social stratification and mobility, economic sociology and industrial relations. His current research focuses on China's labour market reforms and labour market outcomes.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741006000270 Published online by Cambridge University Press